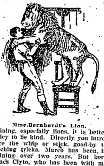
"I am sure that I shall be able to answer every question, and to meet your minutest inspection. But, as regards the proprietorship, I must tell you that he belongs to Mme. Sarah Bernhardt. You are probably aware of her great interest in all animals and her love of making wild beasts her domestic pets. Directly she had seen the wrestling lion and had noticed his extreme docility, she insisted on possessing him. I didn't want to sell him, I had been doing very good business for some time past with him in the provinces, so I named what I hoped would be a prohibitive sum—£1000. However, madame took him at that price—the highest ever paid for a lion. I have met Mme. Bernhardt frequently. She never omits to visit my repository in Earle street when she comes to Liverpool—indeed, Mr. Irving and the leading lights of the drama generally look in. I recollect on one occasion a number of my snakes got loose, and I think you would have been amused if you had seen the great actress entering into the chase with the greatest ardor possible."

I glanced for a moment at the sacred six-legged Indian cow and the quaint Java monkeys, but when I reached Sarah Bernhardt's lion I wanted nothing else to see.

Marco is undoubtedly an extraordinarily fine example of his species and in the pink of condition. Fourteen pounds of finest beef are administered to him during the twelve hours of daily exhibition.

"Now tell me all you know, Mr. Cross, about this lion."

"I got him as a cub, and immediately I was struck with his extreme docility; he 'took down' all other specimens I have had—and I have had scores of them—as regards evenness of temper. With all animal training, especially lions, it is better policy to be kind. Directly you introduce the whip or stick, good-by to teaching tricks. Marco has been in training over two years. But here comes Clyto, who has been with me five years, and who will presently wrestle with the lion."



Mme. Bernhardt's Lion.

Then there approached a good looking young man, 23 years of age, clad in a smart tunic, the left breast of which was decorated with three or four medals—one especially attracted my attention, as on the reverse side it bore the inscription that it was the gift of W. E. Gladstone. By and by he retired to put on his wrestling suit, which, I noticed as he entered the cage, bore in its raggedness unmistakable evidence of the severe contests he had had with the lion.

Before Clyto was within a yard or two of the cage, the lion appeared to scent him, was up and alert, and began to purr round Clyto's legs, as would a pet cat, on his entering the cage. "Up," said Clyto, and the lion placed a paw over each of his shoulders, with his head dangerously near his keeper's face. Then the struggle began. A twist or two, and Clyto had thrown, by a buttock twist, the lion on his back on the floor of the den with a thud. A piece of meat was then the reward of the vanquished. Again there was a prolonged struggle, and this time the lion had thrown Clyto, and was on top of him. Clyto lay for a moment quite still, with the heavy weight of the beast upon him. Then he began to wriggle quietly, with the intent evidently to get from under his load. At last he got free, and was up in a trice and leaned against the bars, panting for breath. The next feat was getting the lion to sit on a chair; when there, Clyto, retired to the other side of the cage, and placed a piece of meat in his mouth. Then, with a jump, the lion sprang on his keeper and took the beefsteak from his mouth, but Clyto had the breath knocked out of him by the heavy impact of the beast. Clyto's next began to sweep out the cage, but he seemed to care little whether he kept his face to his charge or not. While this was being done the lion proceeded to play with the chair as a cat would with a reel of cotton. Evidently the show was nearly over; but, before the keeper left, the lion had got cheeky and made rather a nasty charge, and began to wrestle, and so ardently that Clyto exclaimed: "Come, come! that's enough! This is a bit too rough. Give over, will you!" A short struggle then ensued, and Clyto's head appeared likely to be bitten off; but Clyto succeeded in throwing the lion off and then dealt him a backhander on the face, by way of admonition to better manners. The keeper then deftly slipped out. It was a splendid show.

"Is there much danger, Mr. Cross?" I asked.

"I think the lion has been too well trained. However, what risk there is seems to be appreciated, for I have noticed that some people come to every show, perhaps on the principle that actuated the conduct of those who never missed seeing Van Amburgh of old place his head in the lion's mouth."

"People will sure ask me if the lion is drugged?"

"My best answer is to ask you to give them the evidence of your own eyes. If the animal had been so treated, could he be so alert?"

"But how about the claws? Are they drawn?"

For answer Clyto showed me the lion's paws. There could be no doubt about the power of his majesty's claws.

HELD BY A LIVE WIRE.

Wrapped Around a Car—The Passengers Made Prisoners.

The fifteen passengers on Clifford Avenue Car No. 289 last evening, between 5 and 6 o'clock, had an experience on Massachusetts avenue, near Delaware street, which they will never forget. The motorman and conductor will probably remember the accident for some time, as will each of the hundred or more persons who witnessed it. The car was bound northward, and the trolley wire broke before Delaware street was reached. The live wire wound around and around the car, making the passengers, the motorman and conductor prisoners. The motorman dared not touch the brake. Mrs. Barbara Cregle attempted to jump and received injuries which may result fatally. The wire finally became wound so tight about the car that the car stopped, and those aboard crept carefully out.

The accident was one of the strangest which has resulted since the advent of the overhead wires. In most cases where the trolley wire was broken the wire had fallen harmlessly to one side and little danger had resulted. Yesterday the wire became fastened in some manner to the car, and the motorman realized in a moment the danger there would be in shutting off the current or putting on the brake. All that could be done was to allow the car to run. Fully 150 feet of the wire was wound about the car, some of it becoming fastened along the side where the passengers would have to get off. The motorman was a prisoner, not daring to move a foot for fear of coming in contact with the live wire and not knowing what moment the wire would be brought in contact with him. He first saw the situation, and cried to the passengers to keep their seats. The conductor had to forcibly put several passengers down in their seats. The wire was playing all around the car, and a passenger, in jumping, would have run a great risk in striking it. Several of the passengers screamed and became panic-stricken. Mrs. Cregle risked the wire and jumped, although the car was going rather fast. She fell to the pavement badly injured, and was taken to the drug store of R. I. Eads. It was discovered that she had suffered an injury to her knee, and it is feared she sustained internal injuries by the fall.

The wire broke south of Delaware street, and the car came to a stop a few yards north of the crossing, being brought to a standstill by the mass of wire. While several men held the wire away from the car the passengers alighted, greatly relieved. They all ran to a place of safety. The wire, from where it broke to where the car stopped, was torn from its fastenings. The repair wagon was called, and in half an hour's time the damage was repaired. The street car traffic of the north end lines was delayed for some time because of the accident. Fully 1,000 people gathered around the drug store where Mrs. Cregle was carried. It was reported that several persons were badly injured, but she was the only one hurt.—Indianapolis Journal.

THE CHANGED RUBIES.

Clever Piece of Substitution, and the Offender Never Discovered.

There seems no end to the curious stories about jewels lost and stolen. One of the latest is that of Mrs. A—, who recently took a pair of large ruby solitaires to be reset at —'s, where they had been purchased. The morning after the maid brought her the card of the firm, saying a gentleman wished to see her, and, on going down to the drawing room, she found one of the clerks, who told her that the stones, which were apparently of great value, were, in reality, false and worthless.

Very much agitated over the intelligence, Mrs. A— asserted that the jewels had never left her possession since their purchase, and claimed that the fraud must have been perpetrated before she received them. This, of course, the firm denied, but the feeling on the subject became very bitter on both sides, and detectives were employed by both to ferret out the mystery. When a former butler of Mrs. A— was proved to be a discharged clerk of the well known jewelers, the inference was obvious, although no proof against the man has been found, and the jewels have never been recovered.—Boston Gazette.

The Man Who Walks.

If a person really wishes to enjoy an interesting bit of scenery there is but one way to do it. It cannot be done from the window of a railroad train, nor even from the saddle of a bicycle. A carriage or a horse's back is better, but the best way of all is to use your own feet. The pedestrian can see a landscape or other bit of natural scenery from view-points which are not possible to those who trust to an artificial conveyance. The longer time which he will take in coming up to it gives him a better appreciation of it. It grows upon him as it gradually gets within his vision. People who walk little, miss the least expensive and the very best means of outdoor enjoyment. If pedestrianism should become the fashionable fad that bicycling now is, it would be a national blessing.—Buffalo Express.

Fashionable Anyhow.

First Clerk—That's all the thanks a fellows gets. Here I've had my pay reduced after making a horse of myself.

Second Clerk—Well, there's one satisfaction to you. Docked horses are considered extremely stylish.—Boston Transcript.

It is not generally known that, size for size, a thread of spider silk is decidedly tougher than a bar of steel. An ordinary thread will bear a weight of three grains. This is just about 50 per cent stronger than a steel thread of the same thickness.

Telegraph Experiences.

In a work on the many phases of telegraph life, a sad scene is related. A New Orleans operator was slowly dying of consumption at the home of his boyhood in Franklin, Tenn. Summoning sufficient strength one day, and against the wishes of his devoted wife, he walked to the telegraph office there and requested Memphis to place him in connection with New Orleans. Calling Taylor Adams, an old chum in the office, to the key, the operator requested him to gather around him all his old fellow laborers. Adams complied, and Taylor Brown, the operator, opened his key and sent the following message: "I am dying by inches and my worn-out body will soon be returned to clay. I have come from my sick bed to say good-bye." There was a pause of three minutes when the key was again used. The sounder here ticked: "Taylor Brown has died in the chair." The hand that flashed this, however, was not Brown's but that of the regular operator. A prominent telegraph operator of many years' experience was asked what message of the many thousands that had passed through his hands had made the most lasting impression on him. He replied that he should never forget a message that was mailed some eighteen years ago at Jackson, Miss. The message was put in at 11:52 a. m., with the instructions: "This message must be delivered in the hands of the sheriff of Wilkinson county, Woodville, Miss., before noon." The message was a respite from the governor of the state on behalf of a poor wretch then standing on the gallows awaiting the blow of the ax that would cut the rope. The receiving operator, who tells the story, was in an agony of nervousness, especially as he knew the jail was nearly a mile from the office. The manager of the office, however, was equal to the emergency. Mounting a horse standing in the front of the office, he arrived at the jail just as the last signal was about to be given, and delivered the message in time to stay the proceedings. The unfortunate, whose life was thus spared, was sent to the penitentiary at Jackson, Miss., and after serving nine months secured his liberty, on it being proven that he had been unjustly imprisoned.

There is certainly no baking powder so well known and generally used as the Royal. Its perfect purity, as well as its superiority in leavening power, are matters of fact no longer disputed by honest dealers or makers of other brands. Its virtues are so well known to every housekeeper that the slanders of the dishonest makers of the cheaper goods fail to touch it.

Special Freight Cars on Electric Railways.

The freight traffic on electric railways has led to the construction of many new forms of freight cars. On one line a large quantity of whisky is handled. A large box car, which also carries general freight and supplies for local service, has been made for carrying to the station of the steam railway the barrels of whisky from large distilleries in the district. The car is 28 feet long and 10 feet 8 inches high from rail to top of roof. It is also used as a locomotive and hauls three loaded box cars between the railway and the distilleries. The car is mounted on a pair of four-wheel trucks, with a 25 horse-power motor on each axle, and weighs about 15 tons empty. In Spokane the electric cars which haul wheat and flour between the mills and the railway station have displaced the drays formerly used. The grain cars, which have been specially built for the service, are 20 feet long, and the grain compartment is 12 feet long, 6 feet wide and 5 feet 6 inches high, with a capacity of 12,000 pounds, or 200 bushels of wheat. At the freight station the door, which is hinged and carries a steel hopper, is raised, and the car is loaded with grain from the main line cars. On reaching the mill the car is run over a chute, the gate of the hopper is opened, and the grain is dumped. The floor is then let down to cover the hopper and the car is loaded with bags or barrels of flour to go to the railway station. Whenever the streets along the line require macadamizing the car is used for carrying and discharging the broken stone. It has an Edison double reduction motor on each axle.

The Result of Short Working Hours

An English manufacturer has communicated to a daily paper an interesting report of the result of a five years' experience of the eight-hour rule in his works. He says that at first the wage-cost per ton went up, then dropped, and is now as low as it was in 1880, when the twelve-hour law was in force. In other words, the men get as much work done in eight hours as they used to get done in twelve. This is not attributed to a coincidental improvement in machinery or the methods of manufacture. The managers of the work, who have considered the point, are convinced that, although the men work less hours, the aggregate efficiency of their work is not diminished. This view is supported by the showing of the factory books, which record greater regularity of attendance, increased application and improved health of the workmen. Many of them used to be irregular and drunken, but such cases are now rare. In the long double shift at the end of each week the men often used to be found asleep. Under the new conditions this does not happen. The men look fresher and healthier, and the change in them is markedly shown in the comparatively nimble and lively gait with which they leave the works at the end of the shift.

A Prolonged Flash.

A simple and cheap mode of making a continuous flashlight, or electric torch is described by a correspondent in the Philadelphia Record. His reservoir is a small vial. Its cork is fitted with two tubes, one reaching to the bottom of the fluid to receive air blown in through the lamp, or from a pair of bellows, while the other, starting from near the top, carries out the jet of magnesium powder blown through the first. Into the cork is let a ring of wire, rolled around with cotton wool or tow, placed at the top of the wire rod attached to the cork. The tow or wool is saturated with methylated spirit and ignited, and the jet of magnesium powder is conveyed by the exit cylinder just through the ring of fire, and thus continuously ignited. He finds the apparatus both useful and effective.

TOMB OF THE BONAPARTS.

Four of the Family Are There, and One Coffin Is Empty.

The church in which the coffins rest is in the little village of Saint Leu, half an hour from Paris by rail. It contains five tombs—those of Charles Bonaparts, the father of the great Napoleon; of the eldest son of Hortense, the baby whom Napoleon had chosen for his heir, and whose untimely death at the age of two decided the divorce of Josephine. The gossip of that day said that the adopted heir of the great emperor was also his son, but Rumor is proverbially a liar. The church was restored and the tombs put in order by Napoleon III. in 1850, when he was first president. So, of course, the places of honor are bestowed on the prince-president's father, Louis Bonaparte, who is clad in the royal ermine and extending one arm with a magnificent gesture so full of royal dignity as to be inappropriate for the insignificant brother of the great Napoleon, respecting whom it was tersely remarked that he was neither the ruler of his kingdom nor the father of his sons. Here rest also the remains of the brother of Napoleon III., the young prince who was killed in a skirmish near Forli at the age of twenty-seven, before his wish to see active military service had ever been realized. Once more history repeated itself, for the uncle's death strongly resembled that of his brother's son, the prince imperial, in Zululand, and the same accusation of foul play was brought in both cases. The fifth tomb is empty, as Napoleon III. intended to be interred therein himself, but the fates were against him, and he lies in England instead. On the pedestal of the statute of Louis are portrait medallions of different tenants of the vault. The first is that of the founder of the family, Charles Bonaparte. Less happy than his wife, afterward known as Mme. Mere, he never lived to see the improbably triumphant career of his son Napoleon, and, on the contrary, his death agony, which was terrible, as he died of cancer of the stomach, was given added torture by the thought that he left his wife and helpless children practically destitute. He was but thirty-nine when he died, and the medallion shows us a face of ideal and manly beauty of feature and outline. The vault was chill and damp, the tombs unvisited and neglected; for none of the family ever go there. An unpleasant thrill warns us that we are looking at the eternal tomb of the great adventurer's race.—Paris Letter.

RAT AND RATTLER.

Kentucky Rodent Proved More Than a Match for a Snake.

Thomas J. Bailey, the well known revenue man, now on duty at Curley's distillery in Jessamine county, Ky., tells the story of the remarkable victory won by a rat in a battle with a rattlesnake. The snake was five feet six inches long, and was caught in the cliffs of the Kentucky river and sold to a country storekeeper, who imprisoned the reptile in a box covered with glass and exhibited it as a curiosity to his customers. The groceryman shortly after caught a rat and a large frog and put them in the box for the snake to dine upon. The next morning the frog was missing, but his ratship was still upon the scene of action and apparently indifferent to the snake's presence. The rat remained undisturbed all that day, but the groceryman confidently expected the snake to make a meal off the rodent that night. In this, however, he was mistaken. The next morning, when he examined the box, he found the snake dead and the rat perched upon its head. A large place in the snake's hide showed that the rat had satisfied his hunger with a dish of rattlesnake. The box gave evidence of a struggle between the snake and the rat, and the marks upon the snake's body showed that the rat had been quicker with his teeth than the snake had been with its fangs. The rat was uninjured and was kept as a curiosity.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

One of the Strangest of Homicides.

Alexander Hamilton, who died a few years ago, was, I believe, one of the few men the world has known who has killed his man without being called to account or questioned in any way. He was a brother-in-law of E. N. Tailor, one of our most distinguished citizens, and a descendant, of course, of the only Alexander Hamilton of Revolutionary fame. He was something of a dude in his dress, and would have attracted attention anywhere on that account. One night he was walking in a retired part of the city, when he was approached by a man who asked the time. New York was a dangerous place then at night, and many a man had been robbed and some murdered by inquiries after the hour. Mr. Hamilton had a splendid watch and chain, which the fellow forthwith demanded of him when he had learned the time. Being accustomed to protect himself, he quickly drew his pistol and fired point blank. The highwayman dropped without a groan. Not a policeman was near. Mr. Hamilton supposed him to be dead. He waited there some time, but not a living soul approached. Finally he walked on and went home. From that night until the day of his death he firmly believed he had killed the fellow, but there was never a word written or said of it in any way, shape or manner. It is believed that the man's pals picked him up and disposed of him without letting the police know anything of the killing.—New York Press.

Deer in Maine.

This will be a great year for hunters in Maine, if the deer are as plentiful in the woods next fall as they are now reported to be in the grain fields, orchards and vegetable patches all over the state. Farmers have been telling all summer of the notable tameness of the animals, and lately, they say, the creatures have become actually bold. A Caribou farmer says that last week he saw four fine deer in his oat field, and drove them out. As soon as he had gone away they came right back. This was repeated several times. Of course, he dared not shoot them. Other farmers tell like stories. A party of girls picking berries near North Rockport a few days ago left their pails for a few minutes, and on returning found a big buck eating the berries. And he continued eating until actually driven away.—New York Sun.

Rhode Island's Capitals.

Rhode Island is composed of two parts, its constitutional name still being the "State of Rhode Island and the Providence Plantations." Newport is the capital of Rhode Island, Providence that of the Providence Plantations. There used to be five capitals in the state—Newport, Providence, South Kingston, Bristol, and East Greenwich—every county in the state being represented; but since 1854 there have been only two capitals.—New York Sun.

PLAYING A WHALE.

A Seven-Hours' Struggle, Ending With the Escape of the Big Fish.

About 9:30 a. m., when eight miles southwest of the South lighthouse, Capt. Ed Dodge sighted a whale, and in a few moments the Ocean View was close enough to the great mammal to enable her commander to throw the harpoon, which he did very successfully, imbedding it in the whale's back, probably twelve times. Fifty fathoms of five-eighths-inch rope, with a barrel at its end, was attached to the barb-shaped missile, and almost instantly after the whale had been struck he went scurrying through the water at a terrific rate, the barrel following, and leaving in its pathway a crest of foam beautiful and wonderful to see.

Presently the whale dived deep in the water, but there remained in plain sight the tell-tale barrel to mark his whereabouts. Soon Capt. Dodge added fifty fathoms more of rope and allowed the big fellow to race around with it until it was thought to be sufficiently exhausted to warrant taking in the barrel and winding the rope a turn or two on a cleat of the vessel. This was done about 1:30 p. m., and from that time on to 4:30 p. m. there was much excitement and fun enough on board the Ocean View to last the young women from Springfield and Enfield for years to come. Sometimes the whale ran straight ahead, increasing the speed of the vessel perceptibly; then he would run in a circle. Sometimes he would make a rush across the bow of the vessel; and twice he dived under it. After he had performed the latter interesting trick once Mr. Taylor suggested to the young women that the next time he did it he would knock the vessel into kindling wood with his tail. But the women had faith in Capt. Dodge's skill and judgment, and they were not scared a bit.

For seven hours the Ocean View followed the monster, in one direction and another, until finally she was twenty miles at sea. For more than three hours Capt. Dodge or his engineer had hold of the rope, gradually drawing the whale toward the vessel, in order that it might be killed by another thrust of the harpoon; but at 4:30 p. m. the rope broke where it encircled the ring of the imbedded missile. And now the whale is roaming the great deep, carrying with him the spear as a reminder of the seven hours' battle, while the men who vainly tried to haul him in have hands sore enough to keep them thinking of the whale for some time to come. Capt. Dodge says the next time he goes whaling he is going to have a crew of Massachusetts and Connecticut girls, for they know how to stand at the helm, and all that,—in an emergency, and don't "scare" when the monster's tail is uncomfortably close to the ship.

It was Capt. Dodge's intention to tow the whale into Block Island harbor and put him on exhibition, as it would have been quite a curiosity, not one having been brought in here in the memory of the present generation. The whale was some thirty feet long.—Block Island Letter.

A Difference in Milkers.

Some three or four years ago I read, in the Jersey Bulletin, a brief account of the results of certain experiments made by Dr. Babcock at the Wisconsin station, to test the effects of the process of milking upon the quantity and quality of the milk yield, which were so closely in accord with my own limited observation, that I am now as thoroughly convinced as I could be of anything that there is a wide difference in the value of different milkers, in some cases amounting to as much as 10 per cent of the product. That is to say, that for the simple work of milking alone, men and women are worth 10 per cent more than others, who are otherwise good hands, and claim to be good milkers.—Michigan Farmer.

Obedience Is Worth More Than Geography to a Child.

This lesson of law and obedience, then, is one that needs to combine with love in the very first instruction given to the child. When a boy hears his father say, "My son, do this," the impression made upon him needs to be like that made upon the old Hebrews by a "Thus saith the Lord." His father is the only almighty, practically, that the boy has during the first years of his life. Obedience is worth more than geography.—Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D. D., in Ladies' Home Journal.

In Our Great Grandfather's Time, big bulky pills were in general use. Like the "blunderbuss" of that decade they were big and clumsy, but ineffective. In this century of enlightenment, we have Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, which cure all liver, stomach and bowel derangements in the most effective way.

If people would pay more attention to properly regulating the action of their bowels, by the use of these little "Pellets" they would have less frequent occasion to call for their doctor's services to subdue attacks of dangerous diseases. The "Pellets" cure sick and bilious headache, constipation, indigestion, bilious attacks and kindred derangements of liver, stomach and bowels.

To Keep Bread Fresh.

In Swiss and German farm houses, where the baking takes place once a fortnight, or certainly at fairly long intervals, such a thing as unpleasantly stale bread is almost unknown. It is put away in a peculiar manner, which tends to preserve its freshness. Sprinkle flour freely into an empty flour sack, and into this pack the loaves, being careful to have the top crusts of two loaves touching. Where they have to lie bottom to bottom, sprinkle flour between them. Tie up the sack and hang it up in an airy place, not against a wall, but so that it can swing. The day before the loaf is wanted take it out, brush off the flour and stand it in the cellar over night. In this way bread remains edible three or four weeks.

Bloomers at Newport.

Newport, writes a summer correspondent at that place, has taken to bloomers at last. Until this week not a divided skirt of any kind had been seen, although it was a well known fact that all the young ladies who ride had costumes on hand, and only awaited a leader. This week the more courageous have donned their new suits and made their debut. One now has only to seek out any of the most secluded cycling haunts in the early morning hours to find the fair riders training for graceful riding postures in "rational dress." The new costumes are all in dark grays and browns or black throughout, and only the fullest bloomer patterns, with high gaiters, are to be seen. It is now only a matter of days before bloomer costumes for the wheel will be altogether the thing at Newport.

Washington.

It is expected the battleship Indiana will be ready for trial Oct. 1.

"Insect Life," the monthly entomological bulletin issued by the agricultural department, has been discontinued and two series of bulletins will take its place.

It is probable that no further action will be taken in Washington in the case of ex-Consul Waller until his statement, taken by Newton B. Eustis and Mr. Alexander, is received and examined.

HE WOULD SHOOT.

Deputy Game Wardens Are Bluffed by a Man With a Gun.

West Superior, Wis., Sept. 1.—Deputy State Game Warden Woodley, who has been making it warm for violaters of the game and fish laws, brought in three more offenders to-day. He also brought a story of a bad man who had been killing deer out of season, but who declined to be arrested. Yesterday Deputy Woodley, Frank Tobbits and another assistant went over toward Poplar to investigate one A. W. Shaw, a homesteader, of whom exciting tales are told of his experience on the border and later in Northern Minnesota. He has the reputation of being a man of nerve and desperate if cornered. He fully sustained his reputation, according to Mr. Woodley. It had reached the ears of the game warden that Shaw was killing deer, and knowing that the man would probably resist arrest he took two assistants. Shaw was absent when the trio arrived at the cabin, but there was abundant evidence of the slaughter of deer. The party decided to visit a camp two miles distant and call and pick Shaw up on returning. It was almost sunset when the warden and his assistants quietly approached Shaw's place. When they were about fifty feet from the house Shaw stepped suddenly around the corner of the building with a heavy rifle in his hand. He cocked and presented the weapon and told the three men to skip if they valued their lives. Warden Woodley was inclined to temporize, but Shaw shut him off with the remark that he knew who his visitors were and very emphatically and profanely told them it would be fatal to linger. They retreated instantly, and to-day Woodley came to town and swore out a warrant for Shaw's arrest. A small posse will go out to capture him.

Colorado Mine Owners Responsible for the Loss of Life.

Central City, Colo., Sept. 1.—The accidental flooding of the Americus and Sleepy Hollow mine yesterday caused the death of thirteen miners. Later reports show that twenty-nine men were working in the Sleepy Hollow and Americus mines when last night's disaster occurred. Those who escaped were engaged at points above the line of the break. All below at the time were almost instantly submerged and their bodies must lie there for weeks. The calamity is one which has not been unexpected. For three years past a dispute between the owners of the several mines in the group has been over the question of drainage.

HOME RULE.

The Principle That Might Settle the Struggle in Cuba.

Havana, Sept. 1.—At a reunion last night of the leaders of the Autonomist party an agreement was entered into providing for an active propaganda in the interest of the party. An effort will be made to bring to the attention of the Spanish government the necessity for the establishment of the principle of home rule, thus, it is hoped, satisfying the liberal elements and putting an end to the struggle with the insurgents. By this means it is thought that the insurgents, who, acting in good faith, have taken up arms against the government, may be induced to surrender.

THEY WANT HIM IMPEACHED.

The City Council Decides to Hold a Meeting and Investigate the Charges.

Ashland, Wis., Sept. 3.—Nothing happening in municipal affairs here for years has aroused so much attention and public interest as a move that has been started to impeach Mayor C. M. E. McClintock and have him removed from office.

Ever since Mayor Starkweather at Superior was impeached for extorting money for campaign purposes from city employes, it has been current rumor that Mayor McClintock was guilty of the same practices. This culminated about a week ago when the Daily News, Ald. Williams' paper, made the direct charge against the mayor of extorting money from city employes, and demanded an investigation. Public interest has been wrought up to fever heat ever since, and last night when the council held a meeting the room was crowded with citizens who had assembled to hear what might develop. A document was read by the acting city clerk, signed by three prominent citizens, preferring charges against Mayor McClintock, and asking that he be removed from office. The signers were A. E. Dixon and W. L. Windom, attorneys, and John Y. Scott, lumberman. The three compose a committee of civic federation appointed to investigate the subject. Mr. Windom is chairman of the Republican county committee, and nephew of the late Secretary of the Treasury Windom.

The charges accuse the mayor of extorting and attempting to extort money from city employes, of entering into an agreement with one D. C. Cooper to sanction, permit and license a house of ill fame to be operated here and of allowing gambling to be carried on here with his approval and knowledge. The charges give the names of eight different officers who were victims to the attempted extortion. It is alleged that each subscribed $5, excepting one, who was only held up for 50 cents. It is also alleged in the charge that there was an attempted extortion of money from a large number of street employes.

After hearing the charges the city council decided to meet one night this week and hold an investigation. McClintock has been mayor since last May, defeating W. W. O'Keefe. He ran for member of the council a year and a half ago and was defeated by Ald. Williams. This is his only political experience. He is a member of the Ashland Lumber company.

HINCKLEY'S HOLOCAUST.

First Anniversary of the Great Fire Celebrated.

Hinckley, Minn., Sept. 3.—Memorial exercises of an extensive and elaborate character were held here in commemoration of those who met death in the terrible forest fires of a year ago. The ceremonies took place in a magnificent new city hall. A large crowd of people, many of whom lost friends or relatives in the fire, were present. At the opening of the meeting the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas, On the 1st day of September, 1894, a fearful calamity befell this people, stripping them of all earthly possessions, leaving them bereft, naked and helpless, unprovided with means of sustenance and unable to bury their dead; and, whereas, aid, comfort and succor were unstintedly afforded to the destitute and afflicted by their fellow men of all the world, who, responsive to the cry of distress, were touched with a generous sympathy and prompted to a noble beneficence; and, whereas, this gracious aid, so instantly and bountifully given, relieved want, prevented suffering and inspired hope in breasts oppressed by despair; be it

"Resolved, That we, survivors of the Hinckley holocaust, at memorial services assembled, tender to our countless benefactors this expression of our heartfelt thanks and lasting gratitude; that copies of these resolutions be sent to the Associated Press for publication, and a copy be spread on the minutes of Memorial society.

Storm in Mexico.

Laredo, Tex., Sept. 3.—Information regarding the fearful storm of Friday which raged from Corpus Christi, Tex., and across the border several hundred miles into Mexico is very meager. QUAKE IN THE EAST.

MOTHER EARTH TREMBLES ALONG THE ATLANTIC COAST.

A Number of Cities and Towns in Several Eastern States Experience Earthquake Shocks, but No Damage Has Been Reported.

Brooklyn, Sept. 3. — The Atlantic coast states were shaken by an earthquake this morning, but as far as known no great damage was done. In Brooklyn three shocks in rapid succession were followed by a rumbling noise. The houses trembled and many pictures and other ornaments hanging on the walls were thrown to the floor. Two conductors of the Atlantic Avenue railroad who were dining in a restaurant on Washington street reported that they felt the earthquake shock. The building trembled, while the plates and other dishes on the table were moved. They said the shock was like the effects of a distant explosion. At many hotels the guests were so frightened by the vibrations that they hurried into the hallways to find out the trouble. The guests at the Pierrepont house were very much alarmed, and many of them went down stairs and asked the clerk what had happened. They thought an explosion must have occurred in the hotel.

Jersey City, N. J., Sept. 3. — New Jersey felt the force of the earthquake, the tremor extending throughout the Northern part while the Southern section appears to have escaped the experience entirely. From all of the cities and villages in the northern section the story received is the same. The shock was preceded and accompanied by the low rumbling sound that marks the true earthquake. The trembling motion lasted for several seconds. In some places the estimate of time is as low as three seconds, while others place the duration of the disturbance at from fifteen to twenty seconds.

Philadelphia, Sept. 3. — An earthquake shock lasting several seconds was felt in this city shortly after 6 o'clock this morning. The disturbance by mother earth was violent enough while it lasted to create a good deal of consternation and not a little damage. Buildings perceptibly swayed, windows clattered and banged and clocks and pictures toppled from their places. The shock was most severely felt in the suburban districts and it is said that in one part of George's Hill, in Fairmount Park, a fissure was opened permitting the entrance of a plummet which extended down over 100 feet without touching bottom.

Altoona, Pa., Sept. 3. — The earthquake reported in the eastern part of this state, was not felt here. Reports from along the Pennsylvania road are to the effect that the shock, if any occurred, was not observed.

Wilmington, Del., Sept. 3.—Quite a perceptible shock of earthquake was felt in this city about 6:30 o'clock this morning. The vibration lasted several seconds and was felt in all portions of the town.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Sept. 3.—As far as can be ascertained no earthquake shock was felt in this section.

Chester, Pa., Sept. 3.—A slight earthquake shock was felt here about 6 o'clock this morning.

GENERAL RIOTING

Is Feared in China Unless Americans Quickly Act.

New York, Sept. 3. — The World prints the following cable from Foo Chow, China:

The commission of inquiry into the massacre, sitting at Ku Cheng, progresses slowly. Over 100 arrests have been made. There have been twelve capital convictions. The viceroy retards the work, refusing to give the prefect discretion. There is a day's delay over such questions as are referred to the viceroy. The intention is to exhaust the patience of the commission. At the present rate the trial will last a year. The imperial edict issued, commanding severe measures, is a mere blind.

Rioters at Hok Chiang attacked the Christians, wounded four and destroyed their houses. The dangerous situation is the fault of the magistrate, who issued a proclamation slandering the Christians. Unless Americans be induced to take vigorous measures it is feared that there will be general rioting.

GHASTLY EVIDENCE.

Pietzel's Body Exhumed and the Skull Removed.

Philadelphia, Sept. 3.—From to-day's developments in the Holmes-Pietzel case it is probable that the swindler and alleged multi-murderer will be tried here for the murder of Benjamin F. Pietzel. The body of the latter is buried in Mechanics' cemetery in this city. To-day Dr. Sodebotham, of the coroner's office, with four assistants, went to the cemetery and exhumed the dead man's skull. It had been stated by the district attorney that nothing further would be done in the case until the fate of the children had been settled. This being established, it is believed Holmes will be indicted for murder here, and the skull will be presented so that it will be identified by Pietzel's peculiar teeth.

Ticket Scalpers Arrested.

New Orleans, Sept. 3. — Barrett & Wenar, doing business as railroad ticket scalpers here, with a number of persons associated with them at other points, were arrested to-day for issuing fraudulent railroad passes. The Southern Pacific estimates that it has been fleeced out of $30,000 in fares.

An Attempt Being Made to Down the Croker Faction.

Purroy, long popular among the Democrats of New York. Mr. Purroy, James J. Martin and Thomas F. Gilroy, are the most powerful men in Tammany Hall to-day, and represent the better class of the organization. Henry D. Purroy was born of Spanish and Irish parentage, in the city of New York. He studied law. In 1877 he became president of the New York board of aldermen. From 1881 to 1893 he was one of the fire commissioners of the city, and during the greater part of the period was president of the board. He has also been the county clerk of New York. He traveled extensively and he has long been a leader in Tamany Hall.

THE PARSON KEPT BUSY.

Eight Couples Married by Rev. W. A. Hunsberger of Milwaukee.

Milwaukee, Sept. 3.—There was such a crowd around the residence of the Rev. W. A. Hunsberger, the marrying parson, yesterday afternoon after the arrival of the Chicago excursion boats that the preacher was obliged to call on the police to clear the sidewalk. A Chicago newspaper sent two reporters—a man and a woman—the latter in bloomers, to visit the parson. Their arrival at the Hunsberger house had the desired sensational effect, as the story soon spread along Grand avenue that a pair of bicycle riders in bloomers were being married. The Chicago reporters were unknown to the preacher, and they explained to him that they wished to sit in his parlor to await the arrival of friends who wished to be married, and for whom they wished to act as witnesses. The story was invented by the reporters who wished to be "on the spot" when the grind began. They saw the couples turned out at the rate of about one every twelve minutes. After they had seen all they wanted they departed, and Mr. Hunsberger did not know he had entertained the newspaper people until evening. Eight couples were married while they sat in the parlor, but the preacher refuses to give out their names.

IT'S TIME TO ACT.

SO DECLARES AN ADDRESS TO IRISH-AMERICANS.

In a Call for the Convention of the New Irish Movement It Is Declared That a Crisis Has Been Reached in the Fight for Freedom.

Chicago, Sept. 3. — The official call for the convention of the new Irish movement to be held in Chicago in the latter part of this month has been issued from the headquarters of the executive committee of the new Irish movement. It is as follows:

"The Irish struggle for freedom has reached a momentous period. Ireland, abandoned in the crisis of her fate by the liberal leaders is told by the Tory secretary to the lord lieutenant that the British government is sternly and unalterably opposed to the granting of any measure of home rule whatever. This is the old policy and the old language employed by successive English governments toward Ireland. She has been alternately betrayed by the Whigs and dragooned by the Tories. Nothing worth her acceptance is to be expected from either of the leading English parties. Ireland must, therefore, look to her own children and their descendants for support in her great extremity. Parliamentary agitation has had a long and patient trial, but has utterly failed to accomplish its object. It remains for us to consider what other method of procedure or argument can be used to achieve her liberation. The Irish race in America cannot afford to be neutral or supine while the motherland is being slowly but surely done to death by the usurping enactments of a foreign and hostile power. In unison with thousands of our race distributed throughout the Union, and after mature deliberation, we, the undersigned, have decided to call a convention of Irish-Americans in the city of Chicago to take into consideration the present status of the Irish struggle for freedom and to devise ways and means best suited to the accomplishment of Ireland's independence.

"Now, therefore, said convention is called to meet in the city of Chicago, Ill., at the hall of the Young Men's Christian association. The qualifications for membership in the convention are agreed upon as follows: All Irish-American military, benevolent, athletic, social, religious and literary organizations that favor the independence of Ireland, and are willing to aid our righteous struggle for liberty, are invited to send delegates to the convention of the New Irish movement, apportioned in the following manner: One delegate for every 50 members, and 1 additional for any fraction over 50; 2 delegates for every 100 members and 1 additional for any fraction over 100, and so on in proportion. Individual Irish-Americans of sound patriotic repute who indorse the object of the new movement, and who are willing to give it their aid, will be, on recommendation of the secretary and the indorsement of the committee on credentials, admitted to the privileges of the floor. All societies eligible under this call are requested to elect their delegates immediately."

The call is signed by John F. Finerty, acting president, Chicago; John P. Sutton, acting secretary, New York; William Lyman, acting treasurer, New York; John J. O'Connell, chairman executive committee, Chicago; John T. Keating, secretary executive committee, and by many others prominent in the movement.

ADVISED THE STRIKE.

Ex-Mayor Hopkins Caused Debs to Act.

Chicago, Sept. 3.—The Times-Herald prints the following in its news columns:

Ex-Mayor Hopkins of this city advised the great railroad strike of 1894 which ended in such disastrous loss of property and life. This assertion is made by George W. Howard, vice president and ex-member of the board of directors of the American Railway union, and is confirmed by Eugene V. Debs, president of the American Railway union. Mr. Howard said:

"Mayor Hopkins did advise Debs to tie up the railroads, and there are witnesses to prove it. It is the truth, and the ex-mayor cannot deny it."

A representative of the Times-Herald visited the McHenry county jail at Woodstock, where Eugene Debs is serving the sentence imposed for contempt of court. Howard's statement, as given above, was outlined to him. "That statement," said Mr. Debs, "is substantially correct."

A Fatal Collision.

Duluth, Minn., Sept. 3.—For some months past there has been intense rivalry between the Inman and Singer tug lines at this port, and each has made the most of every opportunity to secure tows. To-day this rivalry culminated in a fatality. The tug Medinah, of the Singer line, was running alongside the steamer Joliet as the latter was passing up the bay and was about to take her line when the Pathfinder, of the Inman line, cut across the bows of the steamer and the Medinah without signalling. A collision at once occurred. The Medinah struck the Pathfinder and she rolled over like a log. Her crew jumped, and all but Fireman Jacob Wasser were saved, being picked up by a passing ferry. Capt. Dietzel, of the Medinah, and Capt. Brown, of the Pathfinder, were arrested and locked up.

Pure baking powders are one of the chief aids to the cook in preparing perfect and wholesome food. While those are to be obtained of well-established reputation, like the Royal, of whose purity there has never been a question, it is proper to avoid all others.

Fire in a Mine.

Pana, Ill., Sept. 3.—A fire is raging in Mine No. 1, of the [illegible] Coal company. The miners are expected to escape through Mine No. 2. It is impossible to get any further information, but from the most reliable information obtainable it is thought that but few men were at work, and it is probable they escaped safely.

Sir Henry Irving and his party arrived at Southampton to-day from London and embarked on board the American line steamship New York.

The 1895 crop is welcome by the elevator men as a means of recouping their losses in handling wheat for the past few years.

They have made a ruling that one grain of wheat which shows evidence of smut in a handful of good grain destroys its value, and it must be graded No. 2 This is a bare-faced steal, and one about which the farmers have a right to feel justly indignant.—Crookston Times

The St. Hilaire dam is nearly completed and is a hummer. The bridge is also completed and is now in use and proves a great convenience to farmers living northeast of town. There is now a ten foot head on which can be raised to about sixteen feet. It is considered by competent judges to be the most substantial structure of its kind in Northern Minnesota, and the facilities it offers for milling purposes cannot be beat. The area of the mill pond will be 116 acres which will furnish boomage facilities for any number of mills which can be located.—Crookston Times.

The Red Lake Falls Gazette suggests a new cure for dipsomania, and it seems to speak authoritatively. It says; Few people have ever known a helpless victim to the whisky habit to be a fruit eater. The taste for the ardent and the taste for the rich acid flavor of the apple do not fraternize Hence if an old "soaker" really desires to quit the use of spirits, he will be likely to do so if, when he feels the craving for a drink, he substitutes an apple or some other ripe healthful fruit will soon become master of him self' Depend upon it, a diet largely of fruit will in a short time put an inebriate back to his normal healthy condition.

The farmers of the Northwest have diversified crops more this season than was thought possible to be done in one year' and the result is not at all encourageing. Nearly one-half of the cultivated land is in other crops than wheat and they will not, from present indications, sell for nearly as much as would wheat if the land had been sown to that cereal. The Northwest is natural adapted to the growing of wheat, and while it is all right for every farmer to raise something else, a little of every thing up to supplying his own and with his fellows, the local demand the News does not believe in a sudden and extensive change from wheat to other crops.—Moorhead News,

If it is to be the rule that wheat prices are fair when the farmers have none to sell and low when they must sell it might be a good plan for a number of farmers to club together and sell a portion of the crop for future delivery. Nobody can speak with authority about future prices of farm products but it is reasonably certain that those who delay until later in the fall,

But right here we would sound a warning Do not cut your flax to early! Yesterday morning the editor received a letter from Rev. O A, Th. Solem on this point, The letter is dated at Sioux City, Iowa, and says; „On the train between Fargo and Ortonville I met a bonanza farmer who for years has raised flax, Passing a flax field that was being harvested he exclaimed; 'That man is ruining his flax, it is too green, I ventured the remark that it looked ripe enough, To this he answered that the straw should be entirely ripe before As long as the straw is the least green the flax is inferior both in quality and quantity,"—Norman County Herald

When a delegation of Fargo business men waited on Mr. Hill of the Great Northern last week in regard to the building of a branch line which would bring more trade to Fargo, Mr. Hill solemnly assured the delegation that he had practically gotten control of the Northern Pacific, and that it was only a question of time before the contract would be signed, In fact some of the delegates were shown the contract —so they say— and they are all convinced that the deal has practically been completed,

Mr. Hill informed them that it was not much a matter of consolidation as it was of harmonizing the interests of the two roads' both in the interes of the stockholders and of the public As the roads are now operated, there is no connection made at intersecting points, In fact their time tables are made so as to make as much inconvenience as possible in getting from one road to the to the other.

All this is to be changed under the new deal. The people are to have better passenger and freight services; and rates are not to be advanced any Looked at in this light, the consolidation would be a good thing and only time will tell whether Mr. Hill is giving the people taffy or facts.—Crookston Tribune.

JOSEPH TIMBLER.

An Incident In the Life of a Man of Punctilious Habits.

"Speaking of punctiliousness," said Colonel Calliper, "you remember my telling you some time ago about a man who was so particular about his dress that at a watering place where he was staying, the tide happening to serve after 6 o'clock, he went clamming in evening dress? That seemed like carrying things to extremes, but I know a much more remarkable case than that—the case of my friend, Joseph Timbler of Storkville Centre, Vt.

"Mr. Timbler always wore evening dress wherever he might be—at home or abroad—after 6 o'clock. There was indeed a period of a month or two in summer, after the Fourth of July and until the latter part of August, when, punctilious as he was, he considered it all right to wear an informal costume at home, but he never did this abroad at any season, and at home, as August waned and September drew near, he put on evening dress again.

"In the course of time Mr. Timbler's health failed somewhat, and the doctors prescribed for him a long sea voyage. He sailed from New York for a trip around the Horn to San Francisco. Aboard ship, as everywhere else, he wore evening dress after 6 o'clock. There was no other passenger, but he always appeared at the evening meal in evening attire. Down through the tropics, into the low latitudes and round into the Pacific day after day and week after week it was always the same in all sorts of weather, and after supper, if the weather permitted, Mr. Timbler sat on deck in his swallowtail coat and broad expanse of shirt front and smoked his evening cigar, an object of great interest to the silent sailor at the wheel.

"In the Pacific the ship that Mr. Timbler sailed on was wrecked. For days she was waterlogged and unmanageable, but the captain clung to her till the last with the hope that he might yet save her or that help would come. But the time came when they had to leave her. The longboat, equipped and provisioned, had been kept ready, and when at last longer delay was impossible the captain gave the order to leave the ship. It was after 6 o'clock, and Mr. Timbler stepped over the rail into his place in the longboat in evening dress.

"For days they floated on the ocean, and at last their provisions gave out. Then for days they starved, and then they drew lots to see who should die. The lot fell to Mr. Timbler. It was noon when the lots were drawn. The killing was set for 6 o'clock. Lots had been drawn for this task, too, and at 6 o'clock the sailor upon whom the lot had fallen came aft, knife in hand, to where Mr. Timbler sat. For once Mr. Timbler was not in evening dress at the hour, though when he saw the sailor approach he knew that the hour had come when he ought to be. He asked for time to dress. He had accepted the lot without a murmur, but he didn't like to be killed in morning costume.

"The sailor carried his request forward, and after a brief conversation it was decided to give Mr. Timbler time. As a matter of fact, Mr. Timbler had been liked aboard the ship both forward and aft. Notwithstanding his punctiliousness in the matter of dress, he could look a gale in the eye, and he was not afraid of salt water. So it was felt that this courtesy was due him, and the sailor went back and told him he would have time to dress. Mr. Timbler was as deliberate as he was precise, and it does not seem altogether improbable that on this occasion he was perhaps rather more deliberate than usual. He came to the end at last, but while he was arranging his tie and the man who was waiting for him was sharpening his knife on the gunwale a shout was heard from forward:

" 'A sail! A sail!' "—New York Sun.

Finger Nail Growth of a Lifetime.

The statistical man who can tell you how many pounds of leather you will wear from your shoes in a lifetime and how many tons of food you will eat, providing you live to the Biblical limit of "threescore and ten," has just finished some odd statistics on finger nail growth. He finds that the average human being cuts away about the one thirty-second part of an inch of nail each week, or a little more than an inch and a half each year. He also finds that the average length of life the world over is about 40 years; that there are 1,300,000,000 miles of finger nails in each generation.—St. Louis Republic.

An Electrograph.

An electrograph for marking linen indelibly was shown to the Royal society lately. The fabric is dampened and a current passed for two seconds from a silver die, carrying silver into the fabric wherever it touches. The current is then reversed for three seconds, reducing the metal. The result is that metallic silver is deposited on the tissue.

ROMANCE OF A MINE.

The Key to Its Site Was Revealed by a Grateful Indian.

A bit of romance will often help the sale of a mining property. And it is a poor hole in the ground to which some legend or tradition does not attach.

"I think," said Colonel J. W. Vroom, "that the most ingenious story to account for the discovery of a mine was told by Colonel J. W. Craig."

"Craig," interrupted a listener, "was the man who sent out from Fort Union, when he was in the army, a train of four mule wagons which was never heard from afterward."

"Craig is dead," continued Colonel Vroom. "He was buried with all of the honors. I am not telling his history, but dealing with a picturesque incident in his career. After he left the army he went into grants and mining. He told me that he won the confidence of a Taos Indian by some favors that he had done him. The first full moon of August, the anniversary of the revolt against the Spaniards in 1680, was approaching. This Indian had said to Craig that in return for his kindness he was going to reveal to him what had never been made known to any white man. On the night of the anniversary the Indian came to Craig and asked him to go with him. They went out of Taos to a hill and ascended it. The Indian pointed to fires burning in various directions, some near and some far, but without apparent significance.

" 'Those fires celebrate the revolt against the Spaniards in 1680,' said the Indian. 'They are lighted every year. To the white men they mean little or nothing. To us they mean a great deal. You have heard that when the Pueblo Indians arose, drove out the Spaniards, destroyed the churches and restored freedom they filled up and destroyed all traces of the gold mines which were worked under Spanish dominion. That is true, but our ancestors desired to preserve for us the knowledge of the location of those mines. So they adopted the plan of lighting fires every year when the first full moon of August comes around. This has been done for 200 years. The anniversary fires are built on the exact locations of the old gold mines. Every fire which you see burning is over what was once a gold mine. You are the only white man to whom this has been revealed.'

"Colonel Craig told me that he noted in his mind as carefully as he could the location of one of these fires and then went back to Taos. Some time afterward he set out on a prospecting tour in the direction where he had seen the signal fire. He discovered what he believed was the place, although most of the ashes had been blown away. On that spot Craig opened a prospect hole. He sold the mine for $15,000."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Oyster Shell Houses.

"Houses built of oyster shells can be seen in a large number of Texas towns," said G. A. Holland, a well known newspaper man of Dallas recently. "The state was at one time undoubtedly a part of the bed of the gulf of Mexico. How many years ago geologists do not know, and natural historians are puzzled at the forms of life, so different are they from any to be found elsewhere."

Mr. Holland then proceeded to unfold a remarkable story. Running across the state from north to south, he said, is an immense ledge or sheet of rock formed of oyster shells.

"This ledge averages about 20 feet in thickness and is used for building purposes in some places, while in others it is ground up and placed upon the ground as a fertilizer. There is a large quarry near Henrietta, in the northern part of the state, and a number of handsome blocks have been constructed from it. When first taken out of the earth, it is white and soft, but when exposed to the air it becomes hard and turns to a beautiful buff color. It was formerly used for foundations only, but during the past few years a great many handsome blocks and residences have been built of it."—New York Telegram.

Modest Wordsworth.

Wordsworth was present at a public dinner one night when he was informed that Stephenson, the celebrated engineer, was present. While the latter was building the Skerrievore lighthouse he had been in the habit of swinging in a hammock during the evenings reading "The Excursion." This was told Wordsworth, who was delighted. At the end of the dinner he was called upon for a speech. He rose and said: "Gentlemen, I cannot make a speech. I never did and am afraid I never shall. But there is a gentleman here present, Mr. Stephenson, the great engineer, and if you call upon him to speak he will doubtless tell you something that will interest you more than anything I could say. He will tell you how he passed the long summer evenings when he was building the Skerrievore lighthouse."—San Francisco Argonaut.

(From the Journal, Detroit, Mich.)

Every one in the vicinity of Meldrum avenue : 1 Champlain street, Detroit, knows Mrs. McDonald, and many a neighbor has reason to feel grateful to her for the kind and friendly interest she has manifested in cases of illness.

She is a kind-hearted friend, a natural nurse, and an intelligent and refined lady.

To a reporter she recently talked at some length about Dr. William's Pink Pills, giving some very interesting instances in her own immediate knowledge of marvelous cures, and the universal beneficence of the remedy to those who had used it.

"I have reason to know," said Mrs. McDonald, "something of the worth of this medicine, for it has been demonstrated in my own immediate family. My daughter Kittie is attending high school, and has never been very strong since she began. I suppose she studies hard, and she has quite a distance to go every day. When the small-pox broke out all of the school children had to be vaccinated. I took her over to Dr. Jameson and he vaccinated her. I never saw such an arm in my life and the doctor said he never did. She was broken out on her shoulders and back and was just as sick as she could be. To add to it all neuralgia set in and the poor child was in misery. She is naturally of a nervous temperament and she suffered most awfully. Even after she recovered the neuralgia did not leave her. Stormy days or days that were damp or preceded a storm, she could not go out at all. She was pale and thin and had no appetite.

"I have forgotten just who told me about the Pink Pills, but I got some for her and they cured her right up. She has a nice color in her face, eats and sleeps well, goes to school every day, and is well and strong in every particular. I have never heard of anything to build up the blood to compare with Pink Pills. I shall always keep them in the house and recommend them to my neighbors."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are considered an unfailing specific in such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus'-dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after-effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, that tired feeling resulting from nervous prostration; all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of whatever nature. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Very Sorry.

He had been worshiping her for months, but had never told her, and she didn't want him to. He had come often and stayed late—very late—and she could only sigh and hope. He was going away the next day on a holiday, and he thought the last night was the time to spring the momentous question. He kept it to himself, however, until the last thing. It was 11:30 by the clock, and it was not a very rapid clock.

"Miss Molly," he said, tremulously, "I am going away to-morrow."

"Are you?" she said, with the thoughtlessness of girlhood.

"Yes," he replied. "Are you sorry?"

"Yes, very sorry," she murmured. "I thought you might go away this evening."

Then she gazed at the clock wistfully and said good night.—Philadelphia Times.

Her Practical Suggestion.

"Do you not believe," he murmured just at that instant when the moon sent a long bar of silver across the water; when the song of the breakers attuned itself to the rhythm of heart throbs; when nature was all that is mystical and melodious. "Do you not believe that we could walk through life together hand in hand?"

"Y—yes, Harold, dear," replied the girl who has been proposed to before. "We might walk it. But I think it would be better to save up enough money to pay car fare once in a while."—Washington Star.

Rosie's Explanation.

The teacher told the children how a wise man once said that we have only one mouth and two ears, so that we may listen and hear twice as much as we speak. Afterward, to see how much of the instruction was remembered, she asked:

"Why is it that we only have two ears and one mouth, Frances?"

"Because we would not have room in our face for two mouths, and we would look too crooked if we had one ear."

"No, that is not the reason. You know, do you, Rosie?"

"Yes, ma'am. So that what we hear may go in one ear and out the other."

ENGLAND ONLY HALF CRAZY.

Wheeling Not So Much of a Fad Abroad as It Is in the United States.

"Bicycling is not nearly so much of a craze in England as here; and the reason therefor, as I figured it out after much interested investigation, is illustrative of a notable difference between the United States and England in athletic and sporting matters," said a wheelman just returned from a transatlantic trip to a New York Sun reporter. "Because of the superb roads to be found in every part of England I expected to find the country simply overrun with bicyclists. But I didn't. Of course there are bicyclists to be met all over the land, but I soon learned that the sport had by no means the general hold on the people disposed to exercise or athletics that it has here. It has taken a comparatively greater hold upon the women than the men, which is entirely consistent with my theory. Here in the United States the growth of bicycling has meant very largely the growth of the habit of taking exercise. We do not go into sports actively, as the English do. We, as a people, don't play baseball, football, or any other athletic game. We are mightily interested in sports, but mostly in seeing professionals at play in them. Of the twenty thousand people who go to see the three or four big football games in a year, how many play football? How many of the ten thousand or more cranks who watch the paid baseball nines ever play the game themselves? Now in England there are actually dozens of football and cricket clubs in every town, and every village and hamlet has its team. They play cricket all summer and football all winter. Every fine evening and every Saturday afternoon every bit of turf near a town or village is covered with players of some game or another. Sport is a profession here; a pastime there. Here the mass of the people are interested as spectators; there, as participants. Bicycling is there only an alternative means of exercise and amusement; here it is practically the one form of athletics that the whole people have taken to. It's a mighty good thing that something has turned up at last to turn the attention of the nation to healthful exercise and athletics. The bicycle fad will wane after a while, for it isn't an ideal sport, although in many ways an attractive one. But other popular outdoor sport will follow in its wake, and I imagine the bicycle craze will figure as the beginning of an important era in American history."

Latest New York Slang.

"Een a meen-ute" is the latest slang phrase on Broadway, and it comes by way of Coney Island, says the Sun. There is a manager of the couchee-couchee show down there whose accent has interested West Brighton and made his oft-repeated "Een a meen-ute" a catch phrase. When his show place is filled with men who whoop it up and ask, "When is the dance coming?" his invariable reply is, "Een a meen-ute." This pleases the West Brighton men-about-the-beach, and they ask each other questions to which the reply "Een a meen-ute" may be made. From this source it was brought to town, and now it rages.

Strength of a Wounded Sea Lion.

A wounded sea lion on the beach at Bear Harbor, Cal., which a hunter had shot and then lassoed, dragged the hunter and his horse into the surf, and got the rope so entagled about the horse that the hunter had to abandon his animal and swim for his life. The drowned body of the horse was washed up on the beach next day. The rope was broken, and no trace was found of the wounded sea lion. The sea lion was so powerful and dragged the horse into the surf so quickly that the hunter was unable to use his knife to cut the animal free.—New York Sun.

FASHION'S FANCIES.

Scotch tweeds are very fashionable for traveling gowns.

Black and white spotted nets are used for neck ruffles.

Stylish black lace gowns are trimmed with white satin ribbon.

The plainest notepaper and envelopes are now the most fashionable.

Buttons are used chiefly for ornament, except in tailor-made gowns.

Sailor hats, with high crowns and narrow brims, are worn without trimmings.

New cream and white serge suits have the vest and sleeves covered with soutache braiding.

Madagascar curtains are now used to cover wicker divans and chairs, and also to cover pillows.

Blue crepon is light and stylish in appearance, and quite appropriate for this season of the year.

The latest shirt waists are of solid colors, and have white collars and cuffs exactly like those worn by men.

New China silks are soft and cool, and many women prefer this material to all others for summer gowns.

The black and white combination is still fashionable in checks, stripes, small patterns, fancy silks, and satins.

Diamond finger rings are now set in black enamel, as this style of setting is said to enhance the brilliancy of real stones.

Stylish silk dresses have for garniture various accessories of open-patterned white nainsook embroidery and satin ribbon.

A dainty blouse waist of silk or cotton, with a skirt of tweed, serge, or mohair, makes the most comfortable and practical traveling dress.

The white duck suits are better made and more elaborate than those of last summer, and some have all the style that comes of being tailor-made.

The summer girl in the country must have white shoes, in spite of the expense, and kid, canvas, and enameled leather are the materials in vogue.

Gowns of Scotch plaid taffeta, light in color, are made with waists and skirts alike, and trimmed on the bodice with velvet of a dark color and ecru linen embroidery.

Bicycles Now and Next Year.

The flood of inventions that is being poured into the bicycle market is almost unprecedented. Bicycle tires, gears, lamps, stands and every part of a bicycle have been used as a basis of experiment. A clever Canadian offered to a manufacturer a neat and practicable little device to make bicycles stand. It could, he said, be carried on every wheel, and he wanted a royalty. He was met by the response that bicyclists were stripping their wheels of every ounce of superfluous weight, and that in the struggle for lightness many men went so far as to leave the tool bags off their wheels, and in case of breakdowns on the road they depended on kindly disposed bicyclists who carry theirs along. Several devices have been invented for facilitating the manufacture of wheels. It is said that the woman's machine is a difficult thing for the maker to produce and keep up to date, for the reason that the improvements are being made at a rapid rate, the needs of the woman bicyclist being better understood. Saddles are turned out at a terrific rate by a new machine. One machine cuts the leather into assorted sizes. These are passed into another machine, and when they appear again they are complete. The hubs, washers, spoke nipples and all the other small parts are handled separately by skilled men. One authority maintains that the wheel of the future will be of wood, and believes that the hickory bicycle will lead all others in popular favor. There are all sorts of prophecies as to next year's bicycles, but so far there is little beyond conjecture. What is announced is that the wheel will be heavier by a few pounds and a great deal stronger. The tendency is to reaction against the lightness and flimsiness of wheels that cannot stand wear and tear. It is also said that the wheels will have a greater diameter and the tire will be about one-half larger than that now in use. This increase in the size of the tire will be mainly in the thickness of the rubber tubing, which will lessen the liability to puncture; six-ply rubber will not tear as easily as two or three-ply. Makers are looking to expend their skill on lessening friction and increasing speed. Although the coming wheel is to be heavier, it will probably carry a rider much further upon a like expenditure of physical energy than the wheel of to-day, and more safely. A large Western syndicate is to put wheels on the market next year for $30 each. This cheap wheel will increase the number of riders, for many persons will buy it, and thus become prospective purchasers of a wheel that will last, who would not learn to ride for many years yet if they were compelled to pay standard prices.

Railroad Station Indicator.

Many ideas have been worked out for the construction of a station indicator for railway stations and trains, and many have been patented, but that seems to be as far as they get. An indicator is about to be fitted upon the cars of the Metropolitan District Railway, London, England, which looks like a practicable device. This railway has about forty-eight stations and frequent trains, so that the apparatus will have a trying test. At a sufficient distance beyond each station, clear of the switches, a piece of timber 4 inches wide by 20 feet long is placed on chairs fastened to the sleepers just in the middle of the track. This carries intermediary gear, which transmits movement to a vertical rod running up to a shaft on the roof. As this shaft moves to the right or the left it actuates an endless chain within the car, which carries the names of the stations in conspicuous letters. So that whatever way the train is moving, it actuates the apparatus on the track and the endless chain is moved correspondingly.

Prize for Electric Energy Meters.

The Royal Scottish Society of Arts has offered for competition a prize of $250 for improvements in electric energy meters, for domestic supply. Competitors are expected to submit, in addition to a descriptive paper, a working meter adjusted for a mean pressure of 115 volts, and suitable for a house in which the minimum number of watts being taken at any time is 4,000. Special importance will be attached to the minimum load at which the meter can register correctly, and to the energy absorbed by the meter when the consumer is using a light load, or when no energy is being taken. Whatever uncertainty may have attended the operation of the old-time gas meter, the users of the electric current can now avail themselves of many accurate measuring instruments. So many improved designs have lately appeared in this country, that in all probability there will be American competition for the Scotch prize.

Experiments in Flax Growing.

Experiments in the growing of flax for fiber have been decided upon by the Agricultural Department. This important work will be begun at once. The experiments will be conducted at East Ferndale, Wash., in the extreme northwest county in the United States. This region is believed by agricultural officials, to be the best adapted to flax growing, in view of its damp, moist climate. The best flax raised in this country, practically all of which is used for oil purposes, leaving fiber out of the question, is said to be raised in the vicinity of Puget Sound. Nine hundred thousand dollars are to be expended on the scheme, and Dr. Thornton, the government agent of the department, is to be assisted by an expert Belgian of wide experience in flax culture.

Success Assured.

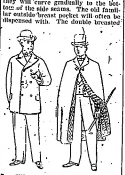
FOR WELL-DRESSED MEN.

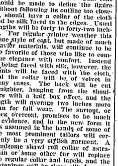
Fashion's Decrees for Fall and Winter Wear.

Up to the close of the luncheon hour the sack suit is not only allowable but is eminently correct and fashionable. A rule that may always be observed with safety is to have the coat, vest and trousers made from the same material. Of course this is not absolute, for even with a single-breasted sack coat a pair of trousers of a different pattern may often be worn, while with a double-breasted sack of a black or dark blue material a pair of trousers of contrasting pattern will offend no rule of fashion. Single breasted sacks during the coming season will generally be of the three button variety, except for a man of unusual height, when four buttons will help to disguise the excessive longitudinal development. About thirty-one or thirty-two inches will be the usual length of the coat, the sides will be shaped to outline the figure not too closely, and the back will hang straight from the shoulder, with less fullness at the hips than we have lately been accustomed to see. The coat will button higher up than for summer wear, and the fronts will be cut rather sharply away from beneath the lowest button to the middle of the thigh, whence they will curve gradually to the bottom of the side seams. The old familiar outside breast pocket will often be dispensed with. The double breasted sack will be about one inch longer than its single-breasted brother, and promises to be a very popular garment, as its heavier collar and lapels give it a warm appearance appropriate to cold weather wear. Three buttons will usually be used to close the fronts though four are allowable if the wearer's stature demands them. Cheviot suitings will be the most fashionable materials, and many new colorings and patterns are shown, such as brown, green and red blendings in what may be called heather mixtures, and plaids of small and large designs will probably be much favored, especially by those who like something verging on the "audible." Double breasted sacks, as hinted above, will usually be made of dark, solid colors.



New Winter Chesterfield. The New Surtout.

The fashionable autumn overcoat par excellence will be the Chesterfield or fly front oversack, which will appear in a variety of very attractive new materials and colorings, such as browns, olives and Oxford grays and blendings of these colors. This coat should be made to define the figure without following its outline too closely, should have a collar of the cloth and be silk faced to the edges. Usual lengths will be forty to forty-two inches. For regular winter weather this same style of coat, but made of much heavier materials, will continue to be the favorite of those who like to combine elegance with comfort. Instead of being faced with silk, however, the fronts will be faced with the cloth, and the collar will be of velvet in many cases. The back will be cut straighter, hanging from the shoulders with a half box effect, and the length will average two inches more than for fall wear. The surtout, or frock overcoat, promises to be much in evidence, and in the new form it has assumed in the hands of some of the most prominent tailors will certainly be a very stylish garment. A handsome shawl roll collar of astrakhan or some other fur will replace the regular collar and lapels, and the fastenings will be three silk frogs instead of the commonplace buttons and buttonholes. It will usually be about forty-six inches long, with a waist length of about 8 1-2 inches. If a man prefers a double breasted overcoat instead of a Chesterfield, fashion says he can have it. It will be made semi-loose fitting, and will be cut straight in the back, without the exaggerated bell or flare of the Anglo-maniacal box coat.



Double-Breasted Sack. A Spanish Mantle.

There is a new wrap, and a most graceful one, to wear over evening dress. The Inverness will, of course, continue to be an eminently correct outer garment, but in extremely cold weather it is scarcely a sufficient protection, and the long, warm and gracefully draping Spanish mantle, which is shown in the accompanying illustration seems to meet the case thoroughly, as it can with a slight movement of the arms be wrapped closely around the body, thus reducing to a minimum the danger of catching cold after leaving the heated theatre or ball room.

An Accomodating Domestic.

"Why didn't you come when I rang?" said a Texas lady to her servant.

"Because I did not hear de bell," replied Matilda Snowball.

"Hereafter when you don't hear the bell you must come and tell me so."

"Yes'm."

A Sympathetic Boy.

Mother—What akes you cry that way?

Johnnie—Our poor teacher has been sick so long, and—and—

"What! Did he die?"

"No—no—He is getting well—boo hoo."

Spirits in the Clock.

Hampton Beach, N. Y., owes much of its popularity to the poet Whittier, for he delighted in the place. Many of his poems were inspired by scenes and traditions about the place. A local landlord tells the following story: "I was talking with Whittier one day about a fine eight-day clock which my family owned, which used to belong to Gen. Jonathan Moulton, and is over 200 years old, and will, when set at certain hours, play four different country dances and marches. Tradition says that just before a member of the Moulton family died the clock, although it had not been wound up for a long time, would strike. A man who was standing by broke in with, 'Say, mister, I've got one of them 'ere old clocks, just as good a one as anybody's; don't you want to buy it?' Whittier looked up quickly, with a twinkle in his eyes, and replied: 'No; your's hasn't any spirits in it.'"

In New Quarters.

Among the business houses in Minneapolis that have shown a steady growth during the past two or three years, there is probably not one that makes a better showing than the T. M. Roberts Supply Company. They have been compelled by reason of this growth to look for new quarters, and have removed their main office to the new block at 717, 719 and 721 Nicollet avenue. While the old store is still kept up for the hardware business, the new one is the headquarters of the largest and most complete "Supply Company" in the Northwest, where you can obtain anything from a baby rattle to an elephant. Terms cash. They will be glad to have their many country friends who come to the city this fall to call and inspect their new place, where a hearty welcome awaits them.

By merely flexing the muscles of his arms is an easy task for Sandow, that superlatively strong man. You will never be able to do this, but may acquire that degree of vigor, which proceeds from complete digestion and sound repose, if you will enter on a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and persist in it. The Bitters will invariably afford relief to the malarious, rheumatic and neuralgic, and avert serious kidney trouble.

of Consumption is stopped short by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. If you haven't waited beyond reason, there's complete recovery and cure.

Although by many believed to be incurable, there is the evidence of hundreds of living witnesses to the fact that, in all its earlier stages, consumption is a curable disease. Not every case, but a large percentage of cases, and we believe, fully 98 per cent. are cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, even after the disease has progressed so far as to induce repeated bleedings from the lungs, severe lingering cough with copious expectoration (including tubercular matter), great loss of flesh and extreme emaciation and weakness.

Conversation at Dinner Table.

Talking is one of the best of all recreations, and a woman who understands the art posesses a most useful and enjoyable accomplishment, writes Amelia E. Barr in the Ladies' Home Journal. No dinner table is well appointed without good talkers; and the basis of interesting conversation is reality. After a course of London dinners Sir Walter Scott said: "The bishops and the lawyers talked better than the wits," that is, the wits talked for the sake of talking and the church and the law had something to talk about. Yet specialties and hobbies are not admissible at a dinner table, and a woman who can only talk on her own fad has no business in society. She ought to write a pamphlet or go to the lecture platform, for any conversation at the dinner table that is a strain on the attention or the patience soon becomes a bore; indeed, one of the chief elements of pleasant company is a readiness to talk or to be talked to on any rational subject.

Tea Superstitions.

Even round the "cup that cheers" some quaint superstitious notions have been woven. For instance, if you put cream into your cup before the sugar it will "cross your love," so be very careful. If, while the tea is being made, the lid, removed to pour in the water, is forgotten to be replaced, it is a sure sign of the approaching arrival of a stranger. If a tea stalk floats in the cup it is caled a "beau," and when it is seen unmarried women should stir their tea very quickly round and round and then hold the spoon upright in the center of the cup. If the "beau" is attracted to the spoon and clings to it he will be sure to call very shortly, if not that very evening; but if the stalk goes to the side of the cup he will not come. In East Anglia, however, this same thing is also said to denote the coming of a stranger, and if the stalk is soft the newcomer will be a lady, if tough a gentleman. If you want to know how many years will elapse before you may expect to be married, balance your spoon on the edge of your cup, first noting that it is perfectly dry, fill another spoon with tea and, holding it above the balanced spoon, let the drops of tea gather to the tips of the spoon and gently fall into the one below. Count the drops; each one stands for a year. If the cluster of small air bubbles formed by the sugar collect and remain in the center of the cup it is a sign of fair weather. If they rush to the sides there will be rain shortly. In some parts of the country these same bubbles represent kisses; in others, silver money. We have all heard, too, of telling fortunes from the grounds left in the bottom of the cup.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Baby Alarm.

The most curious contrivance to which the brain of the ingenious inventor has given birth of late is the "baby alarm." At first blush there would seem to be little market for this new patent; for the baby is generally perfectly successful as his own alarm. To this fact President Cleveland can probably testify, as well as many other unhappy—excuse us, happy—father of three infants. A sensitive microphone, placed near the cot, is connected to a battery and an induction coil and thence by wires to a small electro-magnet. When the baby cries, the microphone sets up an undulatory circuit, which actuates the electro-magnet, and by its oscillation closes a bell circuit. The bell will ring as long as the child cries. This would seem to be a twinning of misery. Nevertheless the new "baby alarm" may come into high favor with nurses, who can thus go down into the kitchen and flirt with the cook's policeman.—Philadelphia Record.

Appreciative.

"There!" said Mr. Johones, after a labored explanation of way he had stayed out so late. "I hope that is satisfactory."

"It is more than satisfactory," Mrs. Johones told him. "It is simply beautiful."—Indianapolis Journal.

FORTY MEN PERISH.

FIRE IN A MICHIGAN MINE CAUSES GREAT LOSS OF LIFE.

Two Hundred Men Are at Work When the Fire Breaks out, but All Except Forty of Them Succeed in Making Their Escape.

Calumet, Mich., Sept. 10.—A fire broke out in the shaft of the Osceola mine, and it is certain forty men and boys have been suffocated or burned to death.

The names of some of the men known to be in the mine is as follows: Trembath, mine boss; Richard Bicket, Michael Johnson, Richard Grenfell, Michael Schulte, John Matzen, William Bryant, Francis Lander, Alex Danfell, John Cudlip, Thomas Curtis, Robert Johns, Peter Martin, Joseph Saghte, James Harrington, William Donald, Barney Elgoro, Antone Seezwenk, all miners, and Peter Stangard and Walter Doble, drill borers.

The fire started in shaft No. 3, which is used to carry the miners to the surface from the mine, and when the fire broke out all the men and boys employed in the mine, about 200 in number, made a rush for the shaft in the hope of being taken to the surface. The fire was too rapid for them, however, and the chance of escaping by that shaft was entirely cut off by flame and smoke. The majority of the imprisoned miners made a break for a cross-cut, and in this way managed to reach another shaft, from which they were taken to the top. Forty were missing when the roll was called.

Within a short time after they had reached the surface smoke began pouring from all the shafts and the escape of the men below was entirely cut off. The men in charge say now that there is not the slightest chance for any of the men now in the mines to escape. If they had not burned they must have been choked by the dense smoke within a short time after the fire started.

Fortunately the mine is not as heavily timbered as some of the mines in this locality, and it will not take it a great while to burn out. As it now stands, there is not the slightest thing that can be done for the men and no effort is being made to extinguish the flames. It is not known how the fire originated.

At the time the alarm was sounded over 200 were underground, and all could have escaped had they used proper precaution. Several miners in their flight passed a group of seven or eight men who had stopped to rest and were smoking their pipes. They seemed to be in no hurry or think of danger. When told to hurry to the surface they remarked that they had plenty of time, and not one of them reached surface. The skips were kept running up and down all day in order to give any of the entombed miners a chance to escape if they could reach the skip alive, but none came up. Another attempt will be made to reach the bottom. There is no danger of the bodies being burned, as it is generally thought that the men escaped from the burning shaft to some of the drifts leading to other shafts and were overcome by gas and smoke before they could reach a place of safety.

Prof. Chas. H. Drew, as Chemist to the Minnesota State Dairy and Food Department, has officially examined every baking powder sold in the State. He gives the preference to the Royal over all others. He says it is an absolutely pure cream of tartar powder and of the very highest leavening power.

THROUGH A BRIDGE.

Serious Accident to a Passenger Train in Kansas.

Fort Scott, Kan., Sept. 10—The Memphis passenger train on the Cherry Valley division was wrecked near Monmouth, Kan. The accident was caused by the breaking of an exel on the smoking car, which let the car down. It struck the iron bridge spanning Lightning creek. The bridge was knocked from the bridge seat and the entire train, with the exception of the engine, plunged to the bottom of the river, twenty-two feet below. Among those most seriously hurt are Mrs. E. Stewart, McCune, arm lacerated; Mrs. Moore, Webb City, Mo., head bruised; Mrs. A. R. Harper, Monmouth, shoulder and arm cut; John Gregg, McCune, shoulder dislocated; Rev. L. L. Bramhill, McCune, badly bruised and nearly drowned; Lizzie Bradley, Cherokee, hip dislocated; Henry B. Ford, Pittsburg, Kan., arm broken; Mrs. Reynolds, Cherokee, internal injuries; Miss Eva Baird, Deland, Fla., internal injuries; Jerry Botkin, Cherokee, jaw dislocated; W. H. Homer, Kansas City, arm broken.

A dozen others were painfully scratched and bruised. The cars and bridge are completely wrecked.

DEPARTED FOR LOUISVILLE.

The committee will make the Galt house in Louisville its headquarters. The members of the delegation go away so full of confidence in themselves and their cause that they are willing to promise that they will not come back at all if they are not successful. They possess all the arguments necessary to victory. They are backed enthusiastically by St. Paul, and Minneapolis is willing to help make the winning, which is a good deal. And they have the strength of a legislative endorsement, which puts the whole state behind them in the effort.

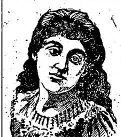
SUFFRAGE IN LONDON.

Mrs. Wynford Phillips is the Leader in the Movement.

London, Sept. 10.—Mrs. Wynford Phillips, society woman, orator and leader of the woman's suffrage cause in London, is widely known and much loved in England. The suffrage movement is gaining ground daily in England, and the best women in the land are its supporters. Mrs. W. Phillips is a slight woman, very beautiful, with earnest eyes and strong features. As a girl bride, just after her husband, John Wynford Phillips, had been elected to the house of commons, Mrs. Phillips made her advent in politics, and scarcely a week passes that she does not address some society. She is an ideal wife and mother. Her two children are handsome, dark-eyed boys. Her London home is very beautiful, but she prefers their wild, picturesque mountain chalet in Switzerland, where the family usually passes the summer.



Mrs. Wynford Phillips.

To manufacturers like the Royal Baking Powder Company, the public is under a large debt of gratitude for the increased purity of articles of food sold at the present day. The reports of the official Government investigations of baking powders show the Royal to be stronger and purer than any other. It is quite evident that neither ingenuity, science nor expense can in any way improve upon the Royal Baking Powder as now before the public.

BUTTE'S SENSATION.

Assistant Clerk Miller Arrested—No Trace of His Late Chief.

Butte, Mont., Sept. 10.—Ex-Mayor E. O. Dugan, one of the three ex-city officials for whom warrants are out on the charge of forgery, is in the city and has not yet been arrested, as the officers say it would be useless to arrest him without ex-Clerk Irvine, of whom no trace has yet been found. P. L. Miller, the assistant clerk, returned last evening of his own accord from the northern part of the state, and was at once placed under arrest. It is expected he will make important disclosures. The bondsmen of the late city treasurer, Simon Jacobs, started the investigation which resulted in the sensational charges against the old administration, believing that Jacobs was not responsible alone for the $50,000 shortage in his accounts. Several other men who are accused of being connected with the alleged conspiracy have left the city. Mr. Dugan claims to be innocent of wrong doing, and if any crime was committed he was an innocent party to it, as he had implicit confidence in his subordinates and signed the warrants as presented to him. Irvine has been one of the most prominent and respected young men in this city, and is connected by blood and marriage with a dozen of the wealthiest and most prominent families in the city, and his friends insist that if he committed a wrong he was led into it by others.

Cruelty to a Boy.

Fullerton, Neb., Sept. 10.—This community is greatly excited over a case of revolting cruelty brought to light by Sheriff Snyder. For several years it has been known that a family named Knapik, in the Polish colony, had an idiotic boy, and lately reports of their ill treatment of the unfortunate have been circulated. Investigation by the sheriff developed that the boy, who is partially paralyzed, has been kept picketed out like a domestic animal in an out of the way place during the day and at night kept in a stable with the calves and other live stock. It was also ascertained that he was unprovided with clothing of any kind during the summer months, but was allowed to go in a state of absolute nudity.

Tornado in Kansas.

Emporia, Kan., Sept. 10.—Emporia and vicinity was visited by a tornado to-day which did $60,000 worth of damage at the state normal school. Considerable other damage was done down town. Clark's wholesale furniture store was unroofed and the stock of goods badly damaged. But meager reports have been received from the surrounding country, where it is feared the damage has been great. At Hartford, twelve miles southeast of here several houses are reported blown down and one woman, Miss Bessie Henry, is dangerously injured. At Neosha Rapids a church, several buildings and a livery stable were destroyed.

AMERICA'S CUP SAFE

DEFENDER WINS THE FIRST OF THE YACHT RACES.

Valkyrie III., the English Boat, Takes the Lead at the Start, but Defender Soon Overtakes Her Rival and Easily Wins the Race.

New York, Sept. 10—In the first race for America's cup Defender fairly beat Valkyrie III. ever a course of thirty miles by 8 minutes and 49 seconds.

The wind varied from five to eight miles an hour. The course was from off Seabright, N. J., to windward east by south fifteen miles and return, the starting gun being fired at 12:20. Valkyrie crossed the starting line four seconds ahead, but Defender was to windward. They carried club top sails. Valkyrie had a baby jib top sail and Defender a No. 2. For a short time Valkyrie out-pointed and out-footed Defender, and things looked blue for 30,000 Americans on the largest fleet of excursion boats and steam and sailing yachts ever seen at an ocean race, and probably any other kind.

In the first three tracks Valkyrie continued her good work. Defender was then sailed with rap full and at once out-footed Valkyrie, though apparently going to leeward. About 3 p. m. the breeze freshened to its greatest power of the day—eight miles—and Defender immediately passed her competitor, and was never afterward approached. Defender was 3 minutes 32 seconds ahead at the outer mark. Thence home, the wind having shifted to about southeast, it was a broad reach. Both yachts set balloon jib top sails. On the reach the wind dropped to five miles before the finish. Defender gained 4 minutes 43 seconds coming home. The excursion boats bothered both yachts somewhat.

It is believed among yachtmen that Defender can beat Valkyrie under any conditions. The official time table is:

Name—	Start.	Outer mark.	Finished.	Elapsed time.	Corrected time.
Defender	12:20:50	3:26:20	5:21:14	5:00:24	4:59:52
Valkyrie	12:20:46	3:29:52	5:29:30	5:08:44	5:08:44

Defender and Valkyrie were both measured at the Erie basin to-day. They arrived at the basin about the same time, the Valkyrie in tow of tug Howard, and Defender having a line from her tender, Hattie Palmer. John Hyslop, the official measurer of the New York Yacht club, was waiting for them, and got to work with his steel tape on the water line measurement as promptly as possible. It cannot be learned why the yachts were remeasured. All agree, however, that whatever the cause of Mr. Hyslop's action to-day, there can scarcely be discovered any mistake that may have been made, enough of a difference between the racers, assuming that the error, if any, was in Valkyrie's favor, to overcome the decisive eight minutes and forty-nine seconds by which Defender won.

The mystery was cleared away later when a notice was posted on the bulletin board of the New York Yacht club that at the request of the earl of Dunraven, and with the acquiescence of Mr. Iselin, the measurer marked the yachts at each end of the load water line. When this was done the measurer, at the request of the America's cup committee, verified the measurements taken on Friday, which were confirmed by the measurements taken to-day.

TO BURN AGENCY BUILDINGS.

Dire Threat of Sioux at the Rosebud Agency.

Chamberlain, S. D., Sept. 10.—The Sioux at Rosebud agency, under the leadership of Hollow Horn Bear, a powerful and influential chief, have warned Indian Agent Weyght and employes to vacate the agency within twenty-one days, and threaten to burn the agency buildings.

A determination on the part of the Indian agency to reduce the rates paid Indians for hauling freight from Valentine, Neb., to the agency is the cause of the trouble. It was proposed to reduce the price from 50 to 25 cents per hundred. Although a trivial matter in the eyes of white people, the Indians took mortal offense, and runners sent to distant camps brought to the agency about 3,000 angry and excited Indians. The Indian agent attempted to appease the Indians' wrath and finally consented to pay 35 cents per hundred.

The Indians are not satisfied and further trouble is apprehended. Crow Dog, the slayer years ago of Spotted Tail, has been lodged in the agency jail for the part he took in the present difficulty. Fort Niobrara is the nearest military post, but the troops are absent on their regular summer field exercises. Information from Valentine states that settlers adjacent to the reservation are becoming uneasy at the attitude of the Indians.

The Wisconsin State Board of Health, in its latest annual report, officially recommends the Royal Baking Powder as a pure cream of tartar powder, containing neither alum nor ammonia. This is a high compliment, for no other powder was so honored by special mention.

Shortage in His Accounts.

Ironton, Ohio, Sept. 10.—A shortage of $18,000 has been discovered in the accounts of County Treasurer M. G. Clay through the investigations of examiners appointed by Probate Judge Russell in fulfillment of the statutes. The treasurer admits the shortage, but claims $2,000 was lost by the failure of the Merchants' bank several years ago; and the balance was missing when he assumed the office three years ago. He has assigned all his property for the benefit of his bondsmen, but the amount will not cover the deficiency.

Teacher and Forger.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 10—William Enseth, a Minnesota school teacher, was to-day sentenced to three years in San Quentin prison for forgery. He forged the name of L. A. Redden, of the Los Angeles Farming and Milling company, to an order for $90.

—Men experienced in dealing with smuty wheat say that if wheat is stackd and allowed to go through a natural sweating Process the smut will dry into a powder and be entirely blown away in threshing, while if threshed from the shock the smut will mix with the wheat. There are many points in favor of stacking and it seems this is another strong recommendation.—Ex.

Col. A. F. Naff arrived in Crookston to-day and will be permanently stationed here, by the powers that be, in Washington. He is a special agent of the general land office and his business is to look after trespassers on government lands, prevent timber stealing and fraudulent entries, It is believed that the coming of Col Naff at this time presages the opening of the agricultural portion of the Red Lake lands. There are 750'000 acres of these lands and in conversation with General Land Com, Lamereau last week Col. Naff was informed that the conditions had all been complied with and it is likely to be the particular work which is to be looked after. He was given to understand that he would remain here permanently and it is his belief that the future has this in store. The Colonel comes well recommended and his experience and efficiency have been complimented by his assignment to this important field. He comes cordially recommended by his acquaintances in Ashland, for his social qualities as well as his business qualifications and the Times bids him a hearty welcome to Crookston,—Crookston Times,

Daniel Webster, the greatest constitutional lawyer this nation has produced, said "I am clearly of the opinion that neither congress nor any other authority can legally demonitize either silver nor gold. If one coin can be dethroned as money then the other one can be and thus the constitution can be disregarded, yes, overthrown. Mr. Webster made one other statment at the same time that I commend to the most thoughtful consideration of gold standard men. These are his words; The command to congress is to coin money, not to destroy it, to create legal tender money for the use of the people, and the grant of authority to create money cannot be construed to mean authority to destroy money,—Ex

Some of the railroads are agitating the advisabilty of reducing the freight rate on potatoes, There is an abundant crop prices are low and unless the freight rates are reduced it will not pay to ship potatoes' The rate on potatoes from northern Minnesota has been so high that it has been impossible to ship them from here except in years when there was a shortage in other states, The proper way to get even on a potato deal is to establish starch factories where the potatoes are raised. There is too much of the products of the Red River Valley shipped out in the shape of raw material, There should be more home manufactures.

The income to the farmers of Olmsted county, Minn; says a Rochester paper, from eggs marketed this summer is not easy to estimate, as a number of competing buyers have been in the field, several of them being concern outside the county. But a conservative guess, by a gentleman in a position to know something about it places the amount of egg income far above $100'000. This item of profit from a source almost wholly neglected years ago, is one indication of the increasing prosperity of Southern Minnesota from the system of mixed farming that is now almost universally adopted Nothing could induce the farmers of this region to go back to the old method exclusive grain raising of a decade or two ago, the benefits of the new regime are becoming so apparent.

The Grand Forks Herald says elevators at Minneapolis and Duluth and other terminal points have formed a combination for the purpose of getting the present wheat crop at very low figures. The scheme is to grade the wheat down about two grades below what it is bought for here, and at the present low prices it makes a vast difference to North Dakota farmers Mr Bull, of the North Dakota Milling company, was interviewed regarding the matter by the Herald, and he stated that such was the case and it appeared as though a strong combination has been formed for the purpose. The company has already shipped considerable wheat, and at the terminals it has been graded down. No. 1 hard is knocked down to No. 2 northern. No. 1 northern goes down to No. 3 northern and No. 2 northern is rejected. The claim, of course is made that it is on account of the smut. So far the wheat marketed has contained much smut, and the most of it is the hard variety and is easily blown out. Crookston Tribune.

HE WANTED A SNAKE STORY.

And the Man From Loudoun County Satiated His Longing.

The man with the Loudoun county whiskers was waiting at the Baltimore and Potomac station for a train to take him home, when a Star man, mousing around there for a stray bit of news, happened on him.

"Hello, there, young feller," he said cheerily, "do you know anything about that Loudoun county snake with a pneumatic tire skin I read of in the paper?"

"Nothing whatever," was the reply.

"Well, do you know, I've got my opinion of snake stories," he continued as he made a place on the truck for The Star man to sit down. "It seems to me that hoss tradin and fishin and snakes and politics are all in the same class, and a man can't have anything to do with any of them if he don't lie some."

"I don't know about that."

"You're old enough to," said the Loudoun man, with a note of reproof in his voice.

"This is no joking matter," said The Star man sternly. "What I want to know is, haven't you some kind of a snake story to tell?"

The Loudoun man rubbed those whiskers for a minute or two.

"Well," he began slowly, "I have run across a thing or two in that line. Last summer as I was goin along the ridge between Snicker's Gap and Ashby's I met up with a snake about 16 feet long"—

"How long?" put in The Star man, with promptness.

"About six feet long," replied the story teller without turning a hair, "and about 14 inches in diameter"—

"How much?"

"About four inches in diameter, and he had a head on to him as big as my hat, and"—

"How big did you say?"

"As big as that," laying three fingers across the palm of his hand as innocently as if he had never been called down in his life. "And he was stretched across the road like he was sunnin himself."

He stopped as if in doubt about finishing, and The Star man urged him a bit.

"Well, what did the snake do?" he asked.

"Just lay there."

"And what did you do?"

"I slipped upon him as quiet as I could with a corn knife I had along with me and give him a whack."

"Did you kill him?"

"Kill him?" he exclaimed. "Not much. I chopped him into a thousand pieces, for I counted them after the fight was over, but I didn't kill him after all."

"Come off," kicked the listener. "Do you mean to tell me"—

"Of course I do," interrupted the Loudoun man, starting for his train in a hurry; "the snake was dead an hour before I got there."—Washington Star.

Neglect of English.

I asked Professor L. A. Sherman of the University of Nebraska if he found the students entering college better prepared in English now than they were in former years. "No," said he, "they are not so well prepared as they used to be. The reason, I suppose, is that the preparation for college now is much easier, so far as facilities are concerned, than it was years ago. In New England 25 years ago there were the two preparatory schools, Phillips Andover and Phillips Exeter, but the majority of those who went to college were obliged to get their preparation through high schools and academies in their own towns, and that meant they must do a great deal of the work by themselves. In those days fewer boys were sent to college. Those who went generally made their own way, and the work that they did was more apt to be thorough and individual work."

"Do you blame newspapers for the poor quality of English used by the people?"

"No, I think newspaper English, poor as much of it is, is an important stepping stone to the reading of the best literature. It forms a connecting link between the settled book language of old and the oral language of every day. Its practical features will be incorporated in the literature of the future and will make it more than it has ever been the literature of the whole people."—Chautauqua Assembly Herald.

Long Life of Wood.

The durability of wet timber is something remarkable. Recently, according to a Vienna paper, one of the piles supporting the bridge built across the Danube by the Emperor Trajan was taken up. Although driven 17 centuries ago, it showed no change save that it was petrified to the depth of three-quarters of an inch.

The chestnut, beech, elm and oak piles on which stand the Savoy palace, London, are undecayed. They were put in place in the latter part of the thirteenth century.—New York World.

POKER AND GLASS.

No Reference to the Game of Pairs, but to a Form of Art.

For a long time poker work, or pyrography, has been a fashionable art, but until recently it has been generally applied to wood only. Now, however, glass pyrography is being taken up, and thus quite a new field is being opened in this fascinating branch of decorative work. In the newer form of pyrography the burning process is exactly the same as in the old poker work on wood, which is now so well known, only the platinum point is made many degrees hotter for the glass—indeed it can scarcely be too hot to accomplish the desired result, and therefore it needs to be of special hardness. This being the case, art dealers now sell points made on purpose for glass pyrography.

The glass used is the ordinary plate, and through it the design can readily be traced with the hot point by those who have not the skill to draw offhand, which saves all trouble of transferring the pattern. Another advantage which glass has over wood is that it has no grain, and therefore the lines of the novice are not marked by that unevenness which characterizes the work of a tyro in the art of wood burning.

Glass pyrography may be adapted to the decoration of mirrors, screens, panels, etc., and if carefully done will be found an excellent imitation of engraved work of the finest kind, and the effect, if a good design be chosen, will be most delicate and beautiful. Just a white frosted design on the clear glass looks very well, but the worker will soon be ambitious of better things.

A pretty piece of the work shows a loose bunch of oxeye daisies and field grasses burned into ordinary clear plate glass. The design when first executed had a frosted appearance, but this was removed by carefully scraping off all roughness with a sharp knife, thus leaving the daisies and grasses in clear outline. The work in that state was beautiful, but it was made more so in the following manner; A layer of gold paint was carried entirely over part of the design, all the etched lines being filled with it.

To effect this a pad of soft cloth was used damped with turpentine to remove all the gold on the flat surface between the lines. An ordinary paper stump with rag over it was used to clean off the rest. This left merely a fine gold tracery on the glass, and on turning the plate it seemed to stand in relief on its surface, though it actually only showed through from the other side. A thick coat of ivory enamel was then laid on, great care being taken not to drag up the gold from the lines. This gave the effect of ivory and gold from the other side and rendered the glass opaque.

Any other lustra or metallic paint may be used instead of gold, and the color of the enamel may be chosen to suit the fancy. In working in remember that the point must be kept at almost white heat, that it must be perfectly clean, and that it must not be used for wood scorching. Should the point be insufficiently heated no amount of force will affect the glass, but it will injure the point itself. The pressure on the point must be firm and steady, but not hard. It is not well to work too long upon one spot, for the heat should be distributed as much as possible. The special point for glass pyrography is furnished with an inner mechanism for generating heat, and, though the work may be done with an ordinary point heated to almost white heat, still the process is tedious and the tool will soon be too much damaged for further use.—Buffalo Express.

"Widows' Row."

The half square on Berks street between Twentieth and Woodstock streets is known to all who are acquainted with the neighborhood as the "Widows' Row." This is due to the fact that no less than 17 bereaved wives reside within its confines. All of these are said to be handsome and thrifty. Five of them are engaged in business for themselves, and 11 have very comfortable incomes. Two years ago there were 23 widows in the row, but four have made new ventures on the matrimonial sea since that time, and two have joined their husbands in another land. It would be a breach of confidence to mention the number who will be remarried before the close of the year, but it is safe to say that the "Widows' Row" will lose its prestige as the abode of lonely females unless several engagements are broken off.—Philadelphia Record.

Japanese Prayers.

The Japanese religion demands that a man must worship "on the soil" every day. Princes and rich men evade this by sprinkling a little dirt in one corner of a room, sometimes on a square of cement made for the purpose.

In 1435 peaches cost in Italy 12 cents a thousand. They were very small, hardly exceeding the size of almonds.

French and American Kitchens.

The kitchen of houses in Paris, which have often been cited as models because they are so small and convenient, have been rebelled against by the Society of French Cooks, who employed Dr. Regnard to find out the causes of the alarming mortality in their profession. It was found that the kitchens were very damp, poorly lighted and had little or no ventilation. As a result their occupants were subject to rheumatism, varicose veins, and hernia, to throat trouble coming from draughts and intense heat to dyspepsia, and to alcoholism, resulting from weakened constitutions. The remedy proposed is to make the kitchens at least 10 feet long, 8 feet wide and 7 feet high, with bedrooms and water closets, larders, and sculleries entirely and effectually separated. A model American kitchen has marbled or tiled floor, tiled wall, open plumbing, marble or zinc-covered tables, and very little wood work. When a kitchen floor is not tiled it should be of the very hardest wood. Georgia pine will not answer, as it soon wears off and becomes rough. When a hardwood floor is out of the question oilcloth or linoleum is an excellent substitute. If cold to the feet small kitchen rugs may be laid before the table and stove.

WILD FLOWERS.

Oh, beautiful blossoms, pure and sweet,
Agleam with dew from the country ways,
To me, at work in a city street,
You bring fair visions of bygone days—
Glad days, when I hid in a mist of green
To watch spring's delicate buds unfold
And all the riches I cared to glean
Were daisy silver and buttercup gold.

'Tis true you come of a lowly race,
Nursed by the sunshine, fed by the showers;
And yet you are heirs to a nameless grace
Which I fail to find in my hothouse flowers;
And you breathe on me with your honeyed lips,
Till in thought I stand on the wind-swept fells,
Where the brown bees hum o'er the ferny dips,
Or ring faint peals on the heather bells.

I close my eyes on the crowded street,
I shut my ears to the city's roar,
And am out in the open with flying feet—
Off, off to your emerald haunts once more!
But the harsh wheels grate on the stones below,
And a sparrow chirps at the murky pane,
And my bright dreams fade in an overflow
Of passionate longing and tender pain.

A CHAPLAIN'S STORY.

Jim Bourn and I were boys together at Westminster, we went to Oxford together, to Balliol, we took our degrees together in the classical (honours) school, and we were ordained together by the bishop of L—— as curates for his diocese. Here our paths separated for some years, and when next we renewed our old friendship I was the rlcar of the town; still single, at thirty-four, and Jim was the chaplain of the famous jail in the same town, and married.

We were talking in my study, as in olden times. Somehow the conversation drifted to the subject of a recent newspaper article: "Ought Married People to Have Any Secrets From Each Other?" I said "No." Jim said "Yes." We both smilingly stuck to our text. It was not often we differed in opinion, but this was one case, anyhow.

"Why, Jim," said I, "you would have been the last person I should have expected to take that line, for I am sure, from what I have seen, that if ever two people were happy and loving they are Ella and yourself. I can't conceive of your having any secret which you would not wish Ella to know."

"Ah," retorted he, with a peculiar smile, "that's just it. Well, Howson, I'll tell you one, if you like, though," he added, "it must remain a secret between us two. I have never spoken of it to anyone in the world, and never shall, except to yourself."

"Thanks, Jim, you need not fear me, as you know. I'm only curious to know the case." And I assumed an attitude of eager attention to Jim's story.

"I was the chaplain of Lowmarket, as you are well aware, before I came here. It is a pretty place, and one wonders whatever made the government build a jail there. However, there it is, and there was I. The amount of society that one got at Lowmarket was perfectly astonishing. Had I the time and inclination for it, I might have turned out a regular 'society' clergyman. As it was, I had a full amount of lectures, soirees, parties and entertainments. Among the people I got in with, none were nicer than the Yorks. Miss York, a maiden lady of fifty, lived in a large and beautifully furnished house, called 'The Cedars,' in the best part of the town. She was known all over the district for her charity, kindness of heart and pure life. Everybody had a good word for her. Nor was her niece, Ella York, any less popular. People in Lowmarket fairly worshiped both of them.

"I was twenty-eight when I first saw Ella York, and at once succumbed to her charms. For weeks her praises had been in my ears, and now, on acquaintance, I found her beauty, her manners, her kindness of heart not one whit less than report stated. I loved her. Of course I could not say so at once, and whether, after two or three meetings in the course of my work—for Miss York, the elder, took great interest in our sphere of labor—she guessed my love and reciprocated it, I could not then say. I found, from judicious inquiries, that Miss York—Ella—had lived with her aunt from childhood; that she was now twenty-four; that her mother was dead and her father lived on the continent for his health; also, that she was her aunt's sole heiress. These facts were, of course, only learned by degrees, as one cannot go to the fountain head for such information.

"After much heart-searching and debating with myself, I thought I saw that Ella York was not wholly indifferent to me, and I resolved to ask her to be my wife. I need not go into details as to how I did it beyond saying that it was one summer morning rather more than five years ago, when, having gone to see her aunt, who was out, I met Ella in the grounds, and after talking as we walked along on various subjects, somehow it came out unexpectedly and almost before I could comprehend what it all meant, Ella York had promised to be my wife, subject to her aunt's consent.

"But her aunt didn't consent. I received a dainty note that night—how tenderly I regarded it, Howson!—from Ella, saying that she had spoken of my visit to her aunt, and had told her I was coming to-morrow for her approval; that Miss York had been kind, but acted rather strangely and said she would see me, but she could not consent, as she did not wish to lose Ella. My dear girl went on to say that she had in vain tried to get from her any more than this.

"I was in a curious frame of mind as I went next morning to see Miss York. What could her objection really be? Surely not to me! My position, my family, my life, were, I hoped, beyond reproach. Even if it were a question of money, I had private means enough, as you know. As for Miss York, well, of course, it would be lonely without Ella at first, after so many years' companionship, but surely, she didn't expect her never to get married! It was preposterous.

"I was destined not to know her objection. As I approached the lodge the portress met me.

"'Oh, Mr. Bourn, this is shocking!'

"I was more puzzled than ever. Why my engagement to Ella should be 'shocking' I couldn't see, and I no doubt expressed it in my looks.

"'So sudden, too, sir!' said the woman. Nobody expected it!'

"'Whatever's the matter?' said I.

"'Why, haven't you heard that Miss York is dead? No? Oh, dear! Poor thing! Had a fit in the night, doctor says; was quite unconscious when Miss Ella got there, and died at 6 o'clock this morning!'

"My heart sank. I felt faint and giddy. It was some minutes before I could move. You will never know how it feels, Howson, unless you have such a blow, which I hope you never will. But I am bound to say my one thought was, 'My poor, lonely, darling Ella!'

"There were no more details to be learned about Miss York's death. She was buried in Lowmarket churchyard. Ella was ill for weeks, and could not see even me. When she was well enough to attend to business, it was found that she inherited all her aunt's money, and, as she had already accepted me, we were married a twelvemonth afterward. She had been awfully lonely, she said, since Miss York's death, but no couple have ever lived happier and been nearer and dearer to each other than Ella and I. May God bless her!"

"Amen!" said I, solemnly and reverently.

"Ella and I," pursued Jim, "could never give the remotest guess as to her aunt's objection to our engagement, and it would probably have remained a mystery to me, as it has to Ella, even now, had it not been for the following circumstances: Some time ago I was sent for at the prison to see a rather desperate character, whose end was very near. He had been sent been sent to seven years' penal servitude some three years before, for forgery, and after serving two years at Portland had been sent to Lowmarket. His appearance was superior to that of the ordinary convict even when a forger. Although I had seen him several times and certainly been struck with his face and appearance, we could not be said to be friendly, as he had been indifferent to all my advances.

"I found him lying in the hospital, and I soon saw that he would not live very long.

"'You seem pleased to see me?' I said.

"'Yes, sir,' replied No. 152, 'I'm glad you've come. I hardly expected you would, considering how standoffish I've been. But I wanted to see you, as the doctor says I'm not likely to last much longer—perhaps not until to-morrow.'

"'There, well, never mind. Keep your courage up, and you'll probably deceive the doctor.'

"I talked to him about his soul, and spiritual things. That we may pass by, Howson. I believe he was thoroughly penitent. I asked him if there was anything I could do for him.

"'Yes, sir, there is one thing, if you will. It's such a curious one I hardly like to ask you.' His eyes looked eagerly at me.

"'Go on,' said I; 'I'll do it, if possible.'

"'I've had a queer life, sir,' said the convict. 'I might have been somebody and done some good, but I got led astray after my marriage, and broke the heart of my wife, who died soon afterward. Yes, I've led a bad life, and it's precious few friends I've had lately, anyhow, but I hope I may be forgiven, as you say God will pardon even the worst of us. And as you'll promise me to do one thing when I am dead, I shall die happy.'

"'I'll promise as far as I can,' said I. 'What is it?'

"'It's to take care of your wife,' answered No. 152, smiling. 'I thought that would astonish you!'

"'Take care of my wife!' I gazed at him in amazement. 'Way, of course I shall! But what is that to you?'

"'A great deal,' said he.

"'Why?'

"'Because she's—my daughter!'

"I looked at him in terror and astonishment, and was about to call the nurse and send for the doctor, feeling sure he was rambling, when he said, slowly:

"'Sit down, sir, please. I can't talk much longer. You need not send for Dr. Darton; I'm all right. I feared it would give you a shock, sir, as it gave me the first time I saw her here with you. Ella York—you see, I know her name all right—was taken when quite a child, by her aunt, who disowned me, and never told the child what her father was. In that she was quite right. She changed her name from Wilton to her mother's name of York, and completed the disguise. Whenever I desired—and, oh, sir, I did often desire—to see Ella, my darling, Miss York always threatened me with the police, and I knew better than to have them on my track, if I could help it. Yes, sir, I see you can't realize it yet, but you'll find Ella Wilton's birth and baptism in the registers at Northfield, and I give you my word it's true.'

"I sat in dumb silence. What could I say: Ella, my Ella, a convict's daughter!

"'Please, sir, don't tell her,' said he. 'She never has known. Don't let her know. But I felt I must tell you, sir, and his eyes looked pleadingly and wistfully at me.

"My senses had somewhat returned.

"'No,' said I, 'of course not. I am half-dazed, but I feel that what you say is true. But Ella is my own now, and always shall be while I live. I wish I had not heard this, but it cannot alter my love for Ella.'

"'Thank God!' he said 'And, sir, there's one thing. The doctor says I may sleep myself away. Do you think it could be managed for my darling to give me one kiss ere I die—just one?'

"'I'll try. Yes,' said I, 'she shall, if you'll leave it to me.'

"'I will. God bless you, Mr. Bourn.'

"I left him. When I got home Ella thought I was ill, and indeed I was. Overwork, I pleaded. In another hour they came to tell me he was asleep, and would not awake in this world.

"I took Ella with me to the hospital. 'Ella,' said I, 'a prisoner who is dying, and has no—few—friends, told me today how he has seen you and would like you to kiss him ere he died, as his own daughter would have done. Will you?'

"'Certainly, darling.'

"And, with eyes full of tears, she did.

"The unconscious form half-rose; the eyelids half-opened; the face smiled. She didn't know. Did he?

"I led her away weeping, my own heart full. I afterward verified his story. But Ella had never known any more, Howson, and never will. There is sometimes a secret which should not be shared between husband and wife, Howson, isn't there?"

"You're right, dear old Jim," said I, as he grasped my hand in silence, but with tear-dimmed eyes. "You're right, old fellow; and God bless you both."—London Tit-Bits.

Just Before Parting

Scroggs—So you are going back to New York, eh? What will you take—a steamer or train?

Marie (from Vassar)—Neither, thanks; I'll take a small bottle, if you really insist upon my taking something.

Electric Lights in Plant Cultivation.

Most praiseworthy work has been done by Prof. Bailey in testing the effect of electricity and electric lights upon plant growth, and his results seem to suggest a new order of plant culture. He found that the burning of an uncovered arc light of 2,000 candle power caused plants to mature earlier than others in a green house lighted only by the sun, and the nearer the plants were to the light the faster was their growth. This rapidity of growth was in some instances so great that the plants could not supply themselves fast enough with food, such, for instance, as water. The plants had to be removed to a distance before water could be supplied quickly enough to assuage their abnormal thirst. Under the influence of the strong continued light plants would assume all sorts of novel and singular habits. Some would run to seed before their leaves were formed; others would be gaunt and straggling, while others, again, would have their stems twisted into fantastic shapes. The colors of tulips became deeper and richer in shade; but the colors lost their intensity after four or five days. Petunias grew much taller and more slender, and blossomed earlier and more profusely. Some plants would be found in the morning stretching out toward the electric light, as if yearning for it, at an angle of 45 degrees. During the day they would straighten up; but they would bend forward toward the light again at night. Lettuce benefited so much by the artificial light that three weeks after planting it was twice the size of that planted at the same time which had received only sunlight. A green house was so arranged that one-half the building might receive the light at night. The plants in the lighted apartments were far superior to those in the darkened one. A bed of 100 violets was set in the lighted compartment, half the bed being covered each night with a black enameled cloth box, provided with ventilation. In three weeks the plants under the electric light began to bloom, while those whose only light came from the sun did not bear a bud for five weeks. The effect of the light is upon some plants almost magical. Panes of glass have been placed in front of them, so as to cover only half their leaves. After a slight growth the parts of the leaves receiving the uncovered light will show a clear boundary line, outside of which the leaves are much healthier. Prof. Bailey believes that if grown under electric light for several generations plants will adapt themselves to hastened growth, just as they have become used to green-house life in winter.

Electric Novelties.

A contrivance for the disinfection of telephone apparatus, comprising a tube in the form of an angular ring placed at the mouthpiece of the telephone, the tube having a number of preforations, and being provided with a rubber ball connected thereto for the reception of the disinfecting materials.

This invention comprises a flat layer of electric heating medium of amorphous resisting material, a ring-shaped electrode of triangular cross-section, having its flat face uppermost, a second electrode of conical shape arranged with its base uppermost and in concentric relation to the ring, both being arranged in the same plane in the heating medium.

An electric car brake, in which electric motors are directly attached to and operate the blower for producing pneumatic pressure.

An electrical controlling system for elevators, having a controlling switch at each landing, for calling the car to that landing, and duplicate switches corresponding to the controlling switches, also placed at other landings whereby the car may from one landing be directed to any of the others.

An electric brake shoe consisting of a magnet arranged about a car axle and suspended by a single spring cushioned bearing above the car axle.

An improvement in the art of electroplating with alloys of platinum, the process consisting in forming a suitable bath containing a chloride of platinum and the sulphate of the other metal or metals desired in the alloy to be electro-deposited, immersing in the bath as a cathode the article to be plated; and an anode composed of an alloy of the metals to be electro-deposited, and finally passing an electro current through the bath.

Royal Baking Powder is the purest and highest in strength of any of the baking powders, and hence makes more, finer and better food. These are the official facts as set forth by the U. S. Government and the various State Chemists' reports. Of course great efforts will be made by those interested in the sale of the cheaper made, alum powders, to continue their sale where consumers have made up their minds to have the Royal and call for it at their grocers. The Royal Powder is as much superior to all the other preparations for quick raising that it will amply repay housekeepers to use the necessary persistency to procure it in spite of all objections.

About Gamboge.

One of the cherished treasures of the schoolboy's paint box is a piece of gamboge. Gamboge, one of the most interesting of Siamese products, is a resinous product indigenous only in the islands and the seacoast of the Gulf of Siam, lying between the 10th and 12th degrees, north latitude. The tree grows to a height of fifty feet and is straight-stemmed, with no lower branches, owing probably to the dense shade of the forest in which it grows. Ten years' growth is required before the tree is ready for tapping. The tapping, which is carried on by the Camodian and Siamese islanders in the rainy months from June to October, when the sap is vigorous, consists in cutting a spiral line around the trunk from a height of about ten feet to the ground. The resin wells out of the bark and trickles down these grooves in a viscous stream into a hollow bamboo placed at the base of the tree, and from these it is decanted into smaller bamboos, where it is left for one month to solidify. To remove the gamboge the bamboo is placed over a red-hot fire, and the bamboo husk cracks off, leaving the article known as "pipe gamboge." The trees can be tapped two or three times in one season, and often present a curious appearance from their network of intersecting spirals. The utmost care has to be taken to prevent rainwater mixing with the resin, as the mixture of foreign liquid causes honeycombing and discoloration. The most valuable gamboge is that which is the least honeycombed or darkened. The bamboos contain on an average less than one pound of gamboge. The price asked by the pickers is at the rate of 75 cents for five bamboos full, and the local price is at the rate of 75 cents for three or $24.50 for 100. The whole output is sold to Chinese traders, and taken by sailing vessels to Bangkok.

SHOWN BY THE TEETH.

Traits of Character Indicated by Their Shape and Size.

Small, short, square teeth, when sound, are indicative of great bodily vigor and strength. They are rarely found in the mouth of an intelligent man. Many very vain women have noticeably long, narrow, fragile teeth. You need not look for much force from their possessors. The huntsman looks carefully at his dog's teeth and selects his canine companion only after such an examination. The horseman invariably looks first at the mouth and teeth in passing judgment on a horse.

The condition of the mouth is just as significant in human beings. Long, projecting teeth denote a grasping disposition, especially when great breadth is seen at the upper part of the nose next the cheek. Usually long and narrow side teeth, commonly called eye teeth, are the accompaniment of doglike tenacity. People with these teeth often curiously resemble dogs when they are angry and show their teeth as an enraged dog will—they snarl literally. They will often have long, narrow hands, slender, tenacious fingers and narrow feet. With a strong under jaw, projecting very slightly, and these long teeth, the subject will fight to the death before yielding; with a receding chin, the indications are ambition, self-conceit and failure to really accomplish great things. Very resolute, determined women usually have strongly set teeth but from a habit of compressing the lips do not display them often.

Almost all men remarkable for energy and strength of will have the same cast of mouth and jaw—notably Napoleon, Luther, Caesar and Frederick the Great. It is said that nearly all red-headed people have rather short upper lips, rising in the center, displaying the front teeth, and that they are singularly susceptible to flattery and exhibit a great desire for approbation.

Men of great resolution have frequently rather large teeth, with a development of the jawbone in the center amounting to a projection and producing a noticeable fullness there. This characteristic is increased in the subjects who combine it with straight and rather long eyebrows. Arching eyebrows are always a sign of a more easily moved nature.

Small, pointed teeth denote many unpleasant characteristics. When accompanied by nearsighted, rough eyes, a pug or snub nose and noticeably small and sometimes very pretty ears, their owner will be found to possess many catlike attributes.—Boston Herald.

BOILER EXPLOSIONS.

An Experiment Showing the Danger of a Brief Neglect.

Some years ago experiments were carried on at Sandy Hook, in the United States, with steam boilers, under various conditions, and among them was a case in which a boiler was exploded deliberately and experimentally by over-pressure; but the manner in which the application of different pressures was made, and the results thereof, teach a rather startling lesson in the line of what might happen under careless management. An old steamboat boiler had been removed, and finally turned over to the experimenters for the good of the engineering profession. The boiler had been, when last in use, tested by hydrostatic pressure up to fifty-nine pounds, had been allowed by the steam-boiler inspectors of the district to carry a working pressure of thirty pounds, and, soon after being removed, was subjected to an experiment which resulted in a violent explosion, completely demolishing the boiler.

The records commence with a steam pressure of 29 1-2 pounds, and in thirteen minutes the boiler exploded with terrific violence at a pressure of 43 1-2 pounds, or 5 1-2 below the hydrostatic test pressure. The rise of steam pressure during the experiment was fairly uniform, and when 50 pounds was reached some of the stay bolts parted in the welds, the crow-feet remaining in place. Then, a few minutes later, quite contrary to the accepted belief as to old boilers gradually giving out with little or no violence, the entire boiler exploded like an immense bombshell, leaving nothing at the location but a mass of mutilated tubes. If that boiler had been in useful service and subject to neglect at various times, with the pressure going to no one knows where, at some time or other, a few minutes' absence of the fireman or engineer, coupled with an overloaded safety valve, would have caused the most destructive sort of a boiler explosion, with the usual mysterious accompaniments.—Cassier's Magazine.

CHAUNCEY DEPEW.

As Seen Through the Eyes of an English Newspaper.

Mr. Chauncey Depew is said to derive huge enjoyment out of an evening in his own house. There are callers every half hour or so, but he is so used to it that it never worries him. He has a splended library, and has a particularly retentive memory. In a night at home he can read up and retain enough fresh material with which to build a dozen good speeches on a big variety of subjects. Political leaders, railroad men, newspaper reporters and a few friends troop in on Mr. Depew in a night, and on the evenings that he attends a dinner, a meeting or the theatre there are always a number of people waiting in his house to see him on his arrival home. Even in his sleep he is not safe from the always present caller. At 1, 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning there is often a loud ring at the Depew doorbell, and when the great speaker pokes his head out of the second-story window he finds a reporter waiting to interview him on some late piece of telegraphic news. Mr. Depew never loses his temper. He can talk in his nightgown from the second-story window at 3 a. m. as well as he can in evening clothes behind the toast table at Delmonico's. No reporter, no matter at what hour of the day or night, who goes to interview Mr. Depew on any reasonable subject comes away empty-handed, and that is one of the main reasons of his international popularity. — Manchester Times.

Premature.

The English yachtmen are already counting on the Valkyrie taking back the America's cup and say: "If it comes back it will stay." Isn't that a trifle overconfident? The race has not been sailed yet, and there's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the ship that is to take it away. To the Englishmen it has long been a cup that cheers, but they are premature in letting it inebriate at this stage of the game.—Boston Herald.

MR. HIGHTON'S STORY.

His Explanation of an Unfortunate Occurrence.

St. Paul, Sept. 5.—About a year ago there appeared in a large number of Northwestern newspapers a telegraphic dispatch from Duluth, in which Mr. A. G. Highton was charged with forgery. It now appears, from the statement given to the press by Mr. Highton, that the charges were not true, but were greatly exaggerated statements of actions, for which, in his unfortunate condition at the time, he was not responsible.

In his statement to the Pioneer Press of Aug. 27, 1895, he says in substance:

He went East on business and took return passage to Portland, Ore., by way of the great lakes. He left Buffalo on Sept. 13, 1894, in the steamship India; in his party there were four. He took with him a five-gallon demijohn of whisky and drank excessively on the trip, arriving in Duluth Sept. 19 on the verge of delirium tremens. He put up at the Spaulding hotel, and after making arrangements for transportation and sleeping car accommodations, set out with his party on a tour of the town, in which all the drinking establishments were visited. An expensive dinner followed, and then more drinking. Mr. Highton's condition became such that his mind is a blank as to his subsequent actions, until he woke up in his car at the union depot, St. Paul, Sept. 20. He went to the Merchants' hotel, where, on looking through his papers, he found that he had given a check for $100.10 to Mr. W. S. Whitten for a private car, and also a check for $20,000 for an option on the Spaulding hotel. His friends explained to him, regarding the $20,000 check, that he had negotiated, the previous evening, with Mr. A. Harrington, of the Spaulding company, for the purchase of the hotel. He notified his friends in Buffalo how to act and no check from Duluth was paid.

In St. Paul more drinking was indulged in. Seeing the account of the Hinckley fire in the papers, and half-crazed with drink, he gave Col. Carson a check for $1,000 for the sufferers, went to Minneapolis and offered Mr. Pillsbury $20,000 for the same fund.

On the afternoon of that day he was arrested in the office of the Great Northern railroad, Minneapolis. Such, he says, are the plain unvarnished facts as to what occurred on Sept. 19 and 20 last, so far as he can learn. As proof of his condition he says that Chief of Police Armstrong testified in court as follows: "His condition was that of a man suffering from the effects of a long spree, and I had to give him whisky every hour to keep him from breaking down on the way from Minneapolis to Duluth."

"Any thinking man," says Mr. Highton, "reviewing my actions on that day, seeing that there was no gain, no object to be attained, must come to the conclusion that there was no criminal motive, but only the mad freaks of a man whose brain was utterly crazed by liquor. Not the slightest charge of forgery has been preferred against me in this case. On the sensational stories the fictitious interviews and the many columned articles which appeared to excite the community against me, I shall not dwell. Suffice it to say that they have done their work and unjustly sent to Stillwater an old man who was guiltless of any intention to commit a crime."

Early Autumn Coats.

The material most favored is a rather rough-surfaced black cloth, depending for its style on the smartness of its cut and the extra large gutta-percha buttons that are positive in their work of fastening it, writes Isabel A. Mallon in the September Ladies' Home Journal. A simulated buttonhole is counted in very bad form, and the best tailors invariably have a double set of buttons and a double set of buttonholes, so that if one side should show any sign of wearing the other can be lapped over and utilized. Blue cloth, very heavy, but smooth-surfaced, is also in vogue, though few light cloths, except the veritable silver gray are seen. Plain, smooth-surfaced silks are chosen for the linings, a brocade being only used when a rather more elaborate style of design is chosen. Hussar effects in black braid continue to be liked, and are arranged in the usual picturesque fashion across the front of a coat, so that they give to a slender woman a decidedly broad appearance. Velvet for lapels, collars and cuffs is frequently seen, although on what is known as the useful jacket no trimming is used. Coats of hunter's green made quite long have set in, after the Louis Quatorze fashion, waistcoats of white cloth elaborately braided in gold or silver and closing with small gold or silver bullet buttons; the cuffs and revers are then faced with white cloth and decorated with the braid in harmony with the waistcoat.

Eggs and Interest.

A dozen hens are worth more to a man than a hundred dollars out on interest at eight per cent, and there is but little risk attached to the ownership of that many hens, whereas there is always considerable risk in loaning money in any amount.

Twelve common hens can be bought for $3 and they should lay and would lay 1,500 eggs in twelve months, if half way cared for. Fifteen hundred eggs at one cent each, which is a very moderate estimate, or average, would be $15 for their eggs in twelve months or five times what the hens would cost.

We know from experience that hens can be kept in comparatively close yards, where two-thirds of what they get to eat is brought and fed to them, at a cost of about 4 cents each per month, or say 50 cents a year. On this basis it would take $6 worth of feed to keep the twelve hens in laying condition for a year, leaving a net balance of $9 to the credit of their keeper, or 300 per cent net profit on the $3 invested.

So much for eggs. Now, let a man buy a rooster and two hens, and just let the hens lay and set. Suppose he should begin now, in July. The hens would surely lay and hatch one brood of chickens each during the autumn. Say twenty chickens from the two hens. They would again certainly lay and hatch each three broods more, beginning with next spring, by the time year would be up, making forty chickens from the two. Less one-fourth loss from sickness or accident, leaving sixty young chickens as the increase in twelve months, worth 25 cents each, or $15. Which, less 50 per cent for the cost of raising, leaving a net profit of $7.50 from 75 cents invested in a trio of fowls in July. This from common chickens and eggs at common prices.

Is there anything else on the farm or in the village that can be made to yield as large a per cent of interest for the same amount invested?—Western Rural.

The increase in the assessed valuation of taxable property in Brooklyn since last year is $10,000,000.

Royal Visiting Cards.

The prince of Wales, always most correct in matters of etiquette, has two sorts of cards, one reading "Albert Edward," the other "Le Prince de Galles," the French term being more often used in royal circles than the other. French being the universal language of royalty, all monarchs have their visiting cards for general use inscribed in the Gallic tongue. Some princes use cards which give their name and title in the native language, but in most cases that is done for a purpose.

"The" in front of a royal or princely title denotes that the person is a sovereign, or, at least, the head of his family. In England it is employed in addressing a peer; for instance, "The Right Honorable." Only one Englishman of non-royal rank makes bold use of the prefix "The" on his visiting card, and this reads, "The Duke of Argyll." His son's and his daughter-in-law's cards, on the other hand, read, "Marquis of Lorne" and "The Princess Louise."

Napoleon's visiting card was two and a third inches long and half as broad. The ex-printer to the Tuileries, still has a sample. It retains up to this day its white and glossy coat, which was due to a special tincture of arsenic. These arsenic-impregnated cards, it was thought at the time, caused a good deal of illness.

A Grand Old Woman.

Baroness Burdett-Coutts gave a garden party recently for the members of the International Geographical congress at her residence, Holly Lodge, and after receiving her guests on the lawn she entered a tiny chaise drawn by a pony and made the tour of the grounds. The baroness is a very wonderful old lady, close on eighty years of age, but she begins to feel the hand of time, and copies this original mode of conveyance to relieve her of the fatigue of standing from the queen, who has a similar pony chaise to go about in. A tall footman holds the pony's bridle and guides the little beast wherever his mistress desires to go. It is said on one occasion the entire equipage mounted the steps of the lodge and landed the baroness within her own hall door.—Boston Herald.

Without a Jury.

"Here is a cigar," said the dealer, "that I would like you to give a trial."

"All right," said Watts. "Hand it over."

"What do you think of it?" asked the dealer.

"It doesn't deserve a trial," said Watts; "it ought to be lynched."—Indianapolis Journal.

BLUE AND THE GRAY.

AN EVENT OF INTEREST TO UNION MEN AND CONFEDERATES.

The Great Chickamauga National Park, Where Occurred Several of the Famous Battles of the Late War, Will Be Dedicated This Week

Chattanooga, Tenn., Sept. 17.—Under the guiding hand of the secretary of war, acting under the authority of congress, Chattanooga and the notable battlefields surrounding it have been prepared for a national event without parallel. Great throngs of veterans who fought against each other are crowding into the city to take equal part, under national enactment, in the dedication of fields which their prowess made memorable, as a national military park, wherein the movements and the achievements of each side have received impartial attention.

As provided in the act of congress, Secretary Lamont has invited the attendance of the executive department of the government, the members of the supreme court, congress and its presiding officers, the lieutenant general of the army and the admiral of the navy, and the governors of all the states with their staffs, and the veterans of the contending armies. All are prominently represented. Nearly every surviving general of the two armies has sent notice of his intention to attend. The governor of every state which had troops in the action here responded favorably to the secretary's invitation. In a few cases the governors themselves will be prevented from attending, but their states will be officially represented.

A joint committee of twenty senators and thirty members of the house will represent congress. The members of twenty-six state commissions who have been at work with the national commission in locating lines of battle of troops of their respective states, will attend. The Society of the Army of the Cumberland and of the Army of the Tennessee, and the G. A. R., and the Association of Confederate veterans will be present in unusual numbers. This concourse of people is to be increased by a gathering of an army of visitors already known to be so great that it will tax the capacity of the railroads centering here and the city to their utmost capacity.

The park which is to be dedicated is of unusual dimensions. It extends, with its approaches, from Sherman Heights in Tennessee, six miles north of Chattanooga, to Glass Mill, in Georgia, a distance of twenty-two miles. The broad boulevard between these two points is owned in fee simple by the government as a part of the park, with full jurisdiction over this, over the fifteen square miles of the Chickamaugua field and over many miles besides of old approaches which has been ceded to the government by the States of Tennessee and Georgia.

The park and its approaches embrace or overlook the field of five days of general battle between great armies and three days of minor engagements, namely: Chickamauga, Orchard Knob, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge, Brown's Ferry and Wauhatchie.

There is no distinction in the preparation of the tablets between Union and Confederate forces, nor in any other department of the work of establishing the park is there any difference. The design is to mark with historical accuracy the identical ground of engagements which occurred on these fields and thus present an object lesson in actual war such as no other nation has attempted.

Steel observation towers rising above the forests at various commanding positions, afford views of the entire theater of battle. Chickamauga is already thickly dotted with state monuments, and, while not over half of which are to be erected have yet been provided, the lines of the three days of engagement are readily followed. Ohio has 55 monuments and 53 granite markers for minor positions in place. Minnesota has five monuments to her two organizations and two of these are the most costly of any yet erected. Massachusetts has a fine granite and bronze monument on Orchard Knob in Chattanooga. Indiana has 37 monuments in course of erection; Illinois has 33; Wisconsin, 10; Michigan, 11; Missouri, 1 Confederate and 4 Union, and all these states have numerous markers. Kansas has 3 excellent monuments to her one regiment. Pennsylvania is working energetically under large appropriations, and Tennessee is preparing contracts for 4 large memorial monuments, one of which is to federal soldiers. New York is preparing to erect costly and imposing memorials on the Chattanooga fields. All of the monuments thus far erected, except those from Indiana, are granite or bronze. Those of that state are Bedford limestone.

As a matter of useful information it may be stated that whenever a cooking receipt calls for a baking powder the "Royal" should be used. The receipt will be found to work better and surer, and the bread, biscuit, rolls, cakes, dumplings, crusts, puddings, crullers or whatever made, will be sweeter, lighter, finer-flavored more dainty, palatable and wholesome.

Afraid of Cholera.

San Francisco, Sept. 17.—The local health officers are seriously considering the establishment of quarantine stations at the north and south lines of the state, along the lines of the railroads, and the plan will be earnestly considered at the joint meeting of the local board of health, the surgeons of the United States marine service and the state board of health, to be held here this week. The health authorities are thoroughly aroused to the threatened danger by the close proximity of Asiatic cholera.

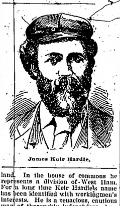
Government Inspection.

St. Paul, Sept. 17.—South St. Paul is to be in line with other principal pork packing centers, and will have government inspection of live stock. The Minnesota Packing and Provision company, which has an extensive English trade in pork products, made application some time ago for government inspection at the yards, and Dr. O. B. Hess has been appointed from Washington as chief inspector at South St. Paul. He expects to appoint two or three assistants and be ready for business this week.

HARDIE FEELS HURT.

The English Socialist Will Soon Return Home.

New York, Sept. 17.—It is said that James Keir Hardie, the English socialist, will return home sooner than he expected, owing to the fact that his extreme socialistic views are not well received in America. Hardie is the leader of the Independent Labor party which is fast gaining ground in England. In the house of commons he represents a division of West Ham. For a long time Keir Hardie's name has been identified with workingmen's interests. He is a tenacious, cautious man of thoroughly independent character, is of Scotch physiognomy, with a shock of light hair, firm mouth and jaw, and powerful physique. He is a strong advocate of home rule.



James Keir Hardie.

HAYWARD'S CASE.

Big Book of Testimony in the Supreme Court.

St. Paul, Sept. 17.—The attorneys for Harry T. Hayward made a return to the clerk of the supreme court this morning of the evidence in the Hayward murder trial. This, together with the bill of thirteen exceptions and the statement of new evidence to be introduced, was filed for the purpose of making an appeal from the order of the district court of Hennepin county denying the motion of Hayward's attorney for a new trial. The return was made in accordance with a notice from Attorney General Childs to Hayward's attorneys, informing them that the return must be made by Sept. 20. The return comprises a bulky package of manuscript containing on its thousand or more typewritten pages a complete stenographic report of the Hayward testimony from the time of the empaneling of the jury until the close of the case, and the motion of Attorney Erwin for a new trial and Judge Smith's denial of the motion.

The case will be one of the first ones taken up by the supreme court when it reconvenes Oct. 1 for the fall term. On its decision in the matter depends the fate of Hayward. If the court refuses to grant the appeal, Hayward will have to suffer the death penalty unless Gov. Clough intervenes. This he has refused to do once, and he will probably not change his mind.

The health authorities of a number of States have recently made exhaustive examinations of the baking powders with the uniform result of finding the Royal superior to all others.

POWERS AFTER BAKERIES.

Will Test the Law Passed Last Winter.

St. Paul, Sept. 17.—Within a few days Labor Commissioner Powers will swear out warrants for the arrest of the proprietors of a half-dozen bakery establishments. Two of the shops are situated in St. Paul, the balance in Minneapolis. The bakery shop owners will be accused of violating the law regulating bakeries that was passed last winter by the legislature. The complaints will be based on the reports of Inspectors Mayo of Minneapolis and Casserly of St. Paul, made to Labor Commissioner Powers after their second tour of inspection of the bakeries of the two cities. The specific charge made will be that the proprietors of the bakeries in question have not kept their shops clean. On this one point, if on no other, Labor Commissioner Powers is determined that the law shall be enforced.

The Work of Professionals.

Blanchard, N. D., Sept. 17. — The postoffice in this town, located in Beinler & Robinson's general store, was robbed last night. The robbers secured some $80 in stamps and $200 in cash, besides taking over $500 in notes belonging to the lumber company. The safe was cleverly drilled, showing the operators to have been experts. No trace.

A column of native troops mutinied at Tatay, Sooloo Archipelago, and killed the commanding officer.

SUNK IN A STORM.

DETAILS OF THE WRECK OF THE STEAMER CHATTERTHUN.

The Vessel Was Carried by Strange Current Onto a Rock in Australian Waters and Soon Went to the Bottom.

Vancouver, B. C., Sept. 17. — The 2,000-ton China steamer Catterthum, bound from Sydney to China, with eighty-one human beings on board, is lying many fathoms deep, off Seal Rock, near Port Stevens lighthouse. Only twenty-six were saved. The terrible details of the catastrophe fill many pages of Australian papers. The following are the names of the drowned: R. Frazer, R. Smith, Mrs. Mathias, Mrs. Loring, Miss Loring, Nell Shannon Liverpool, master; W P. Pinney, chief officer; Harold Leffler, third officer; R. H. Anderson, surgeon; J. H. Harper, Scotland, chief engineer; F. Wilson, second engineer; J. W. Adams, third engineer; A. Wolstendholm, fourth engineer; R. Manning, chief steward and forty-one Chinese.

The accident was due to currents drifting the steamer on the rocks in the fury and darkness of the storm. Mrs. and Miss Loring were the wife and daughter of the secretary of the Imperial Federation League of Australia and were well known in San Francisco, having been on their way there via China.

At the coroner's inquest it was emphatically proved that the steamer was being steered all right and that the only way to account for the vessel's sinking was that some mysterious current carried her on the rocks. Following is an account of the disaster, by a survivor, Dr. Copeman, which most accurately and briefly detailed the circumstances of the disaster:

"I was returning to England by way of China via Vancouver. At 2 o'clock in the morning, I was shot out of the bunks by a terrible shock which was followed by another one. I rushed on deck and found the steamer listed and rapidly settling. An officer told me we had struck a rock. There was no screaming. The skipper was as cool as possible, and told the passengers not to get excited. In the meantime the steamer was being washed to pieces. Capt. Shannon gave orders to lower the boats, and immediately afterward he was washed overboard and drowned. As the boats were lowered they were dashed to pieces and swept away. At last only the starboard boat was left. There were thirteen people in it. It was torn from the davits and washed away. I sprang into the sea and was picked up by a Chinaman. He rescued twelve more, the Chinaman working heroically.

The last one was pulled in by a European. He dropped limp in the stern. I asked: 'Who are you?' He said: 'Fawkes, old chap, thank God.' We tossed about standing all night with seas washing up over us, and were picked up by a fishing boat in the morning. The cargo of the Catterthun was very valuable. Among the cargo were 10,000 sovereigns.

AMERICA'S CUP IS BOYCOTTED

Englishmen Have Probably Given Up the Fight.

London, Sept. 17.—Nothing is known at the Royal Yacht squadron nor at Southampton Yacht clubs regarding reports published in London to-day that the earl of Dunraven has challenged Defender to a race on the Mediterranean sea or that English yachtmen are about to offer a new international cup. Col. Bucknell, of the Royal Southampton club, says he is satisfied that Lord Dunraven will challenge Defender to a race in European waters.

Newport, R. I., Sept. 17.—Lord Dunraven, accompanied by his daughter and M. Maitland Kersey, arrived here to-day on F. W. Vanderbilt's steam yacht Conqueror, which met the party at New London. Lord Dunraven was approached by an Associated Press reporter, who inquired as to the contents of his letter to the cup committee, but the Englishman refused to furnish any information.

The Royal Baking Powder is the greatest of the modern time helps to perfect cooking and every receipt requiring a raising ingredient should embody it.

Arrested for Shop Lifting.

St. Paul, Sept. 17.—Mrs. Rosie Charbonneau, aged thirty-seven, was arrested by Officer Murnane last night on a charge of shop-lifting. The complaint was made by P. J. Lockwood, of Schunemann & Evans' store. The woman was taken to the central police station, where she was searched. In a leather bag which she carried were a package of tea, a lace handkerchief and a cloth toque. Schuneman & Evans put in a claim for the handkerchief, the Golden Rule for the toque and Michaud Bros. for the tea. It appears that the woman had been under suspicion and was followed from store to store.

Rivals Fight.

Birmingham, Ala., Sept. 14.—Near Green Pond, twenty-five miles from here: J. D. Catchings and Sidney Blackburn were paying attention to the same young woman. Last night they met at her house and a desperate hand to hand struggle followed. Blackburn got his pistol and fired three shots in rapid succession, the firing taking effect in Catching's forehead, temple and heart, producing instant death. Blackburn fled, but has sent word to the sheriff of the county that he will surrender, claiming that he acted in self-defense. The young woman was an unwilling witness to the tragedy.

National Banks Not Liable.

Jefferson, Iowa, Sept. 17.—Ex-Judge George Paine raised a unique point of law, sustained by Judge Elwood. The question in controversy was that of usury. Mr. Paine advocated the plea that a national bank is not liable for penalties prescribed by the state, and therefore the district court of Iowa had no jurisdiction. Judge Elwood sustained the objection.

The entire business portion of Lenoxdale, Mass., was destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $35,000.

CAUGHT AT LAST.

Detectives Are Rewarded After a Long Search.

Brooklyn, Sept. 17.—Detectives, after a long watch over the house of William G. Wheeler, on South Second street, succeeded on Saturday night in arresting Wheeler, the last member of a notorious gang of mail robbers and forgers which has operated for more than two years in this city and in other places. Wheeler is locked up. He is forty-five years old and claims to be a hotel clerk. He has confessed his part in the transaction of the gang to Acting Capt. O'Brien.

The combination formed by these crooks about two years ago was made up of Charles Fisher, Robert Wallace, Barney Kelly, alias John A. Gray, William Morgan, alias Billy Hamilton, and Frank Griffin, alias Denny Cairns. They all met in prison and were discharged about the same time in 1893.

From November, 1893, to April, 1895, the gang operated in St. Louis, where they realized $10,000; in New Orleans, where they realized $2,000; in Cincinnati, where they got $1,200; in Pittsburg, where they realized $2,500; in Philadelphia, where they realized $400, and in New York and Brooklyn, where they passed checks forged for an aggregate sum of $5,000. Their plan was to do the mail boxes and use the checks they might find in the letters thus secured, in every instance, when necessary, unless the check was made payable to bearer, forging the endorsement thereon. Wheeler's duty was to dispose of the forged checks, as his appearance was highly respectable.

Their first operation was to pass a check for $50 on a Wall street trust company. Fisher and Wallace were the first of the gang to be arrested. They were apprehended in Baltimore in June, but the rest of them kept steadily at work in this city, despite the misfortune which had come to their companions in Baltimore, and succeeded in operating with several checks. On Sept. 5 Kelly, Morgan and Griffin were arrested and identified by their victims. Kelly was held in Jefferson Market in $2,000. Morgan was turned over to the government authorities and held in $5,000, while Griffin, against whom there was no tangible evidence of guilt, was discharged. It was a long time before the detectives got track of Wheeler, but they finally located him in a house in this city. Yesterday he confessed his part in the scheme.

Wallace, now in prison in Baltimore, came into notoriety in 1890 by stealing bonds and cash to the extent of $52,000 from the safety deposit vault box of his uncle, the proprietor of Wallace Monthly. At that time he had a confederate, Igiatz Lowitz, a bookmaker. Both fled to Cuba, where they were caught and brought back to this city. They were sentenced to long terms of imprisonment but subsequently released.

The authorities of Canada have been making an elaborate study of the baking powders sold there. The official analyst of Ontario says as the result of his investigation that he "finds the Royal Baking Powder far superior to the others," and goes so far as to recommend its use in preference to any other.

SEVEN LIVES LOST.

AS A RESULT OF THE GREAT NORTHERN COLLISION.

Workmen Clearing Away the Wreck Find Two More Bodies, Supposed to be Those of Tramps Who Were on the Baggage Car.

St. Cloud, Minn., Sept. 13.—Not since the terrible Nelson collision three years ago has the Great Northern experienced so dreadful a wreck as that near Melby, a small flag station about midway between Ashton and Evansville. Somebody blundered and five are dead and others injured as the result.

The trains usually meet at Ashby, but orders were received to meet at Melby. These were either misunderstood or forgotten by Engineer Haynes, who rushed by Melby with the terrible result.

No. 2, east-bound passenger train, while running at a comparatively high rate of speed, met No. 3, the coastbound train, and the following were killed and wounded:

Killed—A. K. Emerson, engineer No. 2; James S. Thiebodo, fireman No. 2; W. H. Kershaw, express messenger, No. 2; E. T. Johnson, mail clerk, No. 2; Ira S. Haynes, engineer, No. 3.

Trainmen Injured—Wesley C. Rotert, brakeman, left hand hurt; Fred Burgoyne, brakeman, arm broken and leg scalded; S. D. Betzner, express messenger, leg broken and eye injured; George Williams, mail clerk, seriously injured internally; J. O. Rozenquist, mail clerk, injured in back.

Passengers Injured—Frank M. Curtis, Mason, Wis., arm, leg and face injured, not seriously; Miss Margaret Allison, Mason, Wis., badly cut and bruised over the entire body, and her back injured; Maurice O'Connor, St. Paul, mail clerk, head and limbs injured; Chris Baglow, Fergus Falls, internally injured; H. H. Mohr, San Francisco, head and hands injured; Steve Martin, Streator, Ill., head and limb cut; Mrs. John Russell, Duluth, badly jarred and shocked.

As soon as the news reached here a wrecking crew, having on board Supt. J. B. Rice and Assistant Superintendent Ponsonby, left for the scene of the accident. Doctors W. L. Beebee and J. C. Bolien were also taken on board from here to assist in taking care of the injured. A wrecker from Barnesville reached the scene just before the St. Cloud party.

The point where the accident occurred is at the top of what is known as Pelican hill. Originally the siding here was put in that trains could be taken over the hill in sections, but of late years the grade has been so reduced that the practice has ceased.

It was on this heavy grade that the two fast flyers met, and how the death list is so small is miraculous, as both engines and the mail and baggage cars which followed are complete wrecks.

Chief Dispatcher Buskirk stated the wreck was the worst in the history of the system, and five of the best men have been suddenly killed. He also said that the blame of the accident does not attach to this office, but at the present prefers not to say just where it lies.

All the killed were residents of St. Paul. Mail Agent Flack, of the Willmar line, said this morning he did not see how the mail agents escaped death, as at the point where the accident took place it was always customary for one agent of each train to be sleeping.

St. Paul, Sept. 13.—At Great Northern headquarters, in St. Paul, it was learned that at 1:35 trains 2 and 3 collided one and one-half miles west of Melby. Both engines and the baggage and mail cars are more or less damaged—The balance of the train remained on the track and are not injured. The cause of the accident is supposed to be the result of Train No. 3 passing its meeting place, which was fixed at Melby by special train order. The injured are at Evansville and at farm houses near the wreck, cared for by physicians.

Seven Lives Are Lost.

St. Cloud, Minn., Sept. 15.—A train crew which has been working at the Melby wreck on the Great Northern returned to St. Cloud this morning. They report that last night men clearing up the debris from the disaster found the bodies of two tramps who had been killed in the terrible collision. The identity of the men could not be established. It is supposed that they were stealing a ride on the blind baggage. This makes the total of the dead seven. A track has been built around the wreck and trains are running as usual. Miss Margaret Allison of Madison, Wis., who was with the party going to Portland, and who was more seriously hurt than any other passenger, is still at Ashby with a number of others who were injured.

The verdict of the coroner's inquest was as follows: "We find that the direct cause of the accident is to be laid against Engineer Haines in acting on wrong orders. We further blame the company for ordering passenger trains to meet at blind sidings where no agent is and no lights are kept, also in allowing a conductor to send two orders to the engineer when only one was needed."

An exchange remarks pertinently; The Minnesota state grain inspector is the man who holds the reins and whose decisions mean much to the farmers of the Northwest, in great big dollars In three weeks he dropped three grades in his inspection of wheat. Does the combine own him?

Harry Wack, in concluding his letter published in Saturday's Dispatch, descriptive of his hunting trip through the Valley says: "I am now collecting—not from theorists in legislative lobbies—but from the actual here where the game exists, expressions upon the law of Mr. State, which by its unjust force makes Minnesota a feeding and breeding ground for game shot by Canadians. The more I see and hear of the true conditions pertaining to our game, the more readily I believe that the curmudgeons who pass our game laws have never seen anything but a game of chance, or shot anything but craps."

Mr. Wack's article will be read with great interest by the sportsmen in this section who know the situation and would like to see it presented to the public in its true light.— Crookston Tribune.

An editor down in Arkansas, thusly launches Vol. 1. No. 1, upon the people of his locality: Our aim—tell the truth though the heavens take a tumble. Our paper—of the people, for the people, to be paid for by the people. Our religion—Orthodox; with a firm belief in hell for delinquent subscribers Our motto—take all in sight and rustle for more. Our policy to love our friends and brimstone our enemies, If thine enemy smite thee on the cheek, swipe him with haste and dexterity at the butt of his most convenient ear. What we advocate— our country, one flag and one wife at a time, Our object to live in pomp and splendor."

Do you see that wave of prosperity in the air? No, is there one coming Tom? Why yes! Dont you see in almost every daily paper we get from New York, Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis that a great rich liberal wave has started out on the wings of a demo-republican breeze and is traveling towards the corn-laden prairies with astounding rapidity? It hasn't reached us yet but when it does come you'll see 35 cent wheat and ten cent oats coming into the towns on their own legs and the farmers will be so fat and sleek that there'l be no living with them so cranky and independent don't you know I tell you its coming is almost here: what a rejoicing there will be, among the rich farmers and the mechanics and laborers; and the merchants shall rejoice because of his shall rejoice because of his great business and good profits, The poor and the hungry shall rejoice too (?) because of the cheapness of bread and meat We'll all rejoice and give thanks that Grover the 1st has initiated, such an enormous movement of political wind and hence we record the deed in memory of his greatness.

W. C. Doble, than whom no „knight of the grip" is better known, nor more popular in Crookston' was a passenger on the wrecked train and is out in the Minneapolis papers in a highly indignant tone concerning the treatment of the delayed passengers by the management, He signed the telegram to Gen passenger Agent Whitney, notifying him of the fact that the passengers had worked like beavers all night and wanting to know what was to be done for their comfort and convenience; and express himself as very much surprised that Mr. Whitney denies having received it. He blames the management for the action of its representatives who were upon the ground and for compelling its employes to make time with the heavy trains they were pulling or suffer a jacking up', Mr. Doble says that the women who lost their watches and their money and who should have been looked after promptly and tenderely, were not given any special thought by the railway agent. He says there is a great feeling among the surviving passengers against the conduct of the railroad,s representatives. — Crookston Times.

On his return here Secretary Hoke Smith will be called on to decide a question that will affect the State of Minnesota in a most important matter Chairman Baldwin of the Chippewa commission will lay before the secretary a most complete, carefully prepared and exhaustive statement concerning the Red Lake reservation of Minnesota, together with all details of work remaining to be done by timber estimators and surveyors. The question then to be decided is, can the president or secretary of the interior issue a proclamation opening up the entire tracts of 3,260,000 acres? Major Baldwin insists that no legislation is necessary, and that President Cleveland will, in all probability, issue his proclamation declaring the lands open early next spring to homesteaders.

Major Baldwin has spent the last three weeks going over the entire case with officials of the Indian bureau, and he has convinced Commissioner Browning that the reservation can be opened under the terms of the act of Jan. 14, 1889, creating the Chippewa commission and providing for the allotment, surveys estimates and disposal of the land. Under section 6 of that act, Baldwin, Browning and Major Pollock held that all of the agricultural lands can be declared open to entry as soon as surveyed.

"As the matter now stands," said Major Baldwin, "the work of the Chippewa commission is simply interminable. There is only one thing to do and that is to rush the surveys to completion, make the allotments to the Indians and then open up that vast and fertile region to the citizens who want to make homes in the best state in the Union. More than that. I insist that the secretary has the right to sell the timber on tracts that have been surveyed for more than three years

Fire and timber thieves are fast depleting the pine from these tracts, and it is a matter of dollars and cents to the government, as well as sound public policy to sell the timber on the lands that have been surveyed already. I feel confident that Secretary Smith will side with us and open the agricultural land or homestead entry and offer the pine lands for sale. Crookston Times

EVOLUTION OF A PLANET.

Tracing the Growth of a World From Its First Form of Vapor.

Clearest evidence shows that our earth was once "a lurid haze of light," and that for countless eons afterward her globe was instinct with fiery heat, amid which no forms of life could be conceived to exist, after the manner of life known to us. In the sun, the ruler of the planetary system, we have an orb representing the earlier stage of the past history of our earth, when it was a mass of glowing vapor. The glory of the sun and his fiery heat assure us, as with the clearest words, that he is in the infancy of his career as an orb in space. The spectroscope reveals to us that many of the elements to be found on our earth exist in the sun in the form of glowing vapor. With regard to the mean density of the sun, we find that instead of being far more compressed than the earth, as we might expect from its enormous mass were it in the same condition, it has a mean density only one-fourth of hers. All these features prove that the sun is in the first stage of world life, the glowing, vaporous stage, when the whole frame of a planet is instinct with fiery heat and aglow with intense luster.

We will find the second stage of a world's growth in the giant planet Jupiter. At this period of its existence the earth was surrounded by deep masses of clouds, the water was boiling on its surface, the whole air was red hot. The heat was so intense that the water could no more have rested on that surface than it can rest on a surface of redhot iron. Vast quantities of steam rushed upward, passing with terrific uproar into the upper air. The waters now forming the seas and oceans on our earth were then in the form of vapor. At this stage of its career the whole frame of the earth was enveloped by dense clouds. These clouds were in an atmosphere drenched with muriatic, sulphuric and other acids, which, together with boiling water, descended upon the earth in the form of intensely hot rain. After having been subjected to these forces the earth arrived at the present stage of existence, when it has become the abode of life. After having served as the home of mankind it will slowly lose its fertility, imperceptibly fade away, as man himself does, and finally arrive at the fourth period of a planet's life—the stage of planetary decrepitude, as shown in the planet Mars.

When we examine Mars, we cannot help noticing the comparative smallness of its water surface. The seas on Mars cover but one-half of that planet's surface, while on our earth the proportion the water surface bears to the surface of land is 72 to 28. The conclusion seems to be that the older the planet the smaller the oceans. This view seems startling at first, but it has been confirmed by scientists such as Sterry Hunt of America, Frankland of England, Meunier of France and Neumann of Germany. According to their theory, the oceans of the planet, as it grows older, are withdrawn into cavities, while the atmosphere grows rarer and rarer, until life becomes an impossibility. Finally the planet becomes waterless and airless and arrives at the final stage of death. We have this period represented by the moon, and it shows how our earth will be when it has reached this stage, "going around the sun a mere graveyard, carrying the memories of a past life."

So we have to accept the evidence that death has to come upon the earth at some future time, however unpleasant the thought may be, and that after life has gone from our earth it may pass to the larger planets. Then, after trillions of years, during which Jupiter and the other planets of the solar system may become the abode of life, a period may come when death will reign throughout the whole planetary system. Then life may pass to another solar system; and so, age after age, the worlds will live on, throughout eternity, "chanting the glorious epic of creation, the poem of the universe." We may find a new meaning that would better agree with our ideas of an almighty power. It is not with less reverence for the universe and for the power which works in and through it that we must pursue our study of the heavens. In the words of Tennyson:

Let knowledge grow from more to more,
Let more of reverence in us dwell,
That mind and soul, according well,
May make one music as before.

HE LOST HIS NERVE.

After This Affair With the Sheriff Wild Jim Was a Changed Man.

A score of us saw the man as he came cantering into the frontier town on his cayuse, and more than one remarked how singular it was that he was unarmed. He hitched his horse to a post in front of the Big Elk saloon, and had just disappeared within the door of the shanty when a man came running up and exclaimed:

"Boys, that's the sheriff over at Deadwood, and he's come for Wild Jim!"

We crowded into the saloon to see what would happen. There were five men playing poker at one table and three at another. One of the men was Wild Jim, who was wanted for murder. On entering the place the sheriff had backed up against the bar and faced the players. Wild Jim had leaped to his feet and pulled a gun with either hand, and the other players leaned back and looked around to see what was going on.

"After me, Joe?" queried Wild Jim as he stood with guns presented.

"Yes."

"Going to take me dead or alive?"

"Yes."

"You can't take me alive, and if you move a hand I'll drop you!"

The sheriff smiled and looked around the room and back at Wild Jim and queried:

"How does the game stand, Jim?"

"I've just dealt a hand."

"All right—finish it."

Wild Jim sat down and took five minutes to play out the hand. Then he looked up and said:

"Sure you want me, Joe?"

"Dog sure."

"Jest come for me?"

"Jest for you."

"Then I'm goin to kill you where you stand!"

He raised the gun in his right hand and blazed away, firing six shots as fast as his finger could pull trigger. The sheriff never moved. When the smoke had rolled out of the open door and we could see him, he stood in the same position and his face wore the same smile. One bullet had burned his cheek—a second had grazed his ear—a third had cut through his shirt collar under the left ear. Wild Jim was a dead shot, and yet he had missed his man at 15 feet.

"Got through, Jim?" asked the sheriff, breaking a silence that was positively painful.

"And you—you are not heeled!" gasped Jim as his arm sank slowly down.

"No—come on!"

"You didn't bring your guns?"

"No. If you are through shooting we'll go."

Jim laid his two guns down on the table before him and walked to the door and out into the street. His horse was tied to a post a block away. He reached the horse, mounted, and then headed down the long street after the sheriff, who was giving him not the slightest attention. In five minutes the pair were out of sight.

"What ailed Jim?" I asked of the barkeeper, who had come to the door of the saloon.

"Lost his nerve," he brusquely replied.

"How do you mean?"

"Why, the sheriff coming without a gun and standing there to be shot at took all his sand away and made a woman of him."

"Suppose the sheriff had had a gun?"

The man jerked his head toward the field wherein 15 or 20 victims had been buried and said:

"He'd a-bin over thar!"

"And will Wild Jim get clear?"

"Likely, but he'll hev to leave here. The boys hev already put him down as n. g."

At his trial for murder in Deadwood Wild Jim was discharged from custody, but he went forth a changed man. No man took him by the hand—all men avoided him. Two weeks later he was found dead in Custer City—a victim of suicide.—Detroit Free Press.

A Bullet In the Brain.

A man shot through the brain, says Victor Horsley, dies, not through failure of the heart's action, but through the want of breath occasioned by the explosive effect of the bullet passing through the wet brain substance, and consequent injury to the base of the brain. The heart goes on beating, but respiration stops; indeed, the heart is stimulated, not depressed, when a bullet enters the brain, and the proper treatment of a man thus shot is the same as that resorted to in the case of drowned people—one should try to set up artificial respiration.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

A Once Popular Duet.

"What Are the Wild Waves Saying?" a duet that was once immensely popular, was suggested to Dr. Joseph Edwards Carpenter by the conversation in "Dombey and Son." The music was by Glover, the deservedly famous writer of sentimental and devotional concerted pieces.

A Point in Popularity.

Apropos of the known antagonism to Gen. Beauregard by the Richmond authorities the incident is related that ex-Senator and Gen. Wigfall, of Texas once went to Mr. Davis, and in his brusque way said:

"Take my advice, Mr. President—let Beauregard alone. When the men are naming their race horses and steamboats, and the women calling their babies 'Beauregard,' don't rub against that kind of popularity. It's dangerous to you and won't hurt him. Keep your hands off."—New York Telegram.

A Panacea.

"How sad! Don Frollan has just died a moment ago!"

"Indeed!" exclaimed his doctor, "then it is his own fault; he never would take the pills I ordered him, and as could be expected he is dead. If he had taken them he would be alive now!"

"Oh, but he was run over by a coach."

"Well, people who take my pills keep indoors a long time and don't get run over."—Bremon.

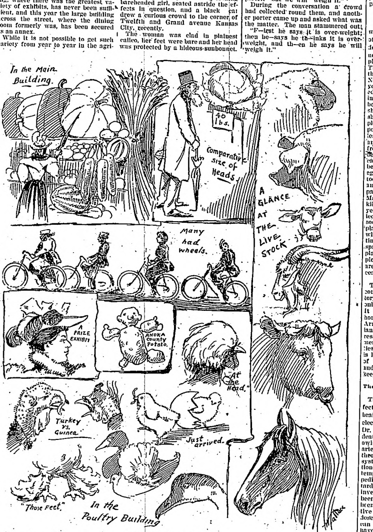
WOMEN'S FACES—like flowers, fade and wither with time; the bloom of the rose is only known to the healthy woman's cheeks. The nervous strain caused by the ailments and pains peculiar to the sex, and the labor and worry of rearing a family, can often be traced by the lines in the woman's face. Dull eyes, the sallow or wrinkled face and those "feelings of weakness" have their rise in the derangements and irregularities peculiar to women. The functional derangements, painful disorders, and chronic weaknesses of women, can be cured with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. For the young girl just entering womanhood, for the mother and those about to become mothers, and later in "the change of life," the "Prescription" is just what they need; it aids nature in preparing the system for these events. It's a medicine prescribed for thirty years, by Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y.



SOME OF THE THINGS SEEN.

A GREAT STATE FAIR.

MINNESOTA STATE FAIR A GREAT SUCCESS.

The Thirty-Sixth Annual Fair of the Minnesota Agricultural Society Surpassed All Its Predecessors—All Departments Were Crowded With Exhibits.

St. Paul, Special.—The Minnesota State Fair association never opened any of its exhibitions under more favorable auspices than it opened the thirty-sixth annual fair. The display of farm products and works of art and skill generally is something fine; in fact, all that the most particular could ask for; the weather, threatening at first, took a turn for the better, and the day proved to be an ideal one for taking in such a show. The crowd was a flattering indorsement of the efforts of the fair management to fill the week, from the first moment to the last, with star attractions, and the crowds that flocked into the grounds at Hamline during the week must have been almost unexpected by the management, in spite of the fact that it had taken great pains with the programme and had gone to considerable expense in order to arrange something attractive.

As for the fair itself, of course it is somewhat the same old story. It will never be possible to vary a display of pumpkins much, and the only way improvement can be secured is by a larger exhibition, with a better quality of products. This seems to have been the rule this year, and the display, especially in some buildings, was so large that the exhibitors were actually crowded. The space in the main building, where there was the greatest variety of exhibits, has never been sufficient, and this year the large building across the street, where the dining room formerly was, has been secured as an annex.

While it is not possible to get such variety from year to year in the agricultural department, although the exhibit can be made more attractive, there is one place at the fair where improvements are always in order, and this year the newest things on the ground were to be found there. The exhibit of farm machinery is referred to. Here there were several new inventions calculated to help out the farmer and reduce his hours of work; and they attracted considerable attention. Briefly, they were a new road making machine and a new harvester of giant proportions.

Over 20 0cars of exhibits were bestowed about the grounds. This is remarkable, when last year's 40 cars are remembered. The cattle and horse exhibit far surpasses anything of the kind ever attempted in the state. There are 517 entries of cattle, 255 of horses, 160 of sheep, 225 of swine and 500 entries in the poultry department.

One of the most interesting places on the ground was the building in the rear of the agricultural building where St. Louis and Carleton counties had their exhibits. The collection of ores and minerals was the most pretentious ever shown in the Northwest. The exhibits were disposed in such a manner that the process of developing the ore from the time it is taken from the mines until it is rolled into massive steel beams was illustrated.

The prison twine exhibit was a distinct feature in the main building. Immense samples of the convict's work were bestowed in huge piles. The three grades of prisoners were represented by automatons wearing the garb of the Stillwater laborers.

In no previous year have nature's gifts been so lavishly displayed. The horn of plenty has been spilled and the fruits and flowers, the grasses and grains, the good things of the garden are found in super abundance on every hand.

The Minnesota forestry exhibit occupied the center of the main building, and was one of the most interesting exhibits in the building.

Agricultural Hall was as bright as a French market on a July morning. The counties represented were Moore, Anoka, Stevens, Crow Wing, Isanti, Mower, Carleton, Carver, Polk Blue Earth, Aitkin, Mille Lacs, St. Louis and Itasca. The showing of vegetables in this department was very fine.

Both sides of the building at the rear were filled with rare and beautiful flowers, which rendered the air heavy with fragrance. The hall was as attractive as myriads of flowers and artistic arrangements of garden products can make it.

Never before has the management of a state fair in Minnesota been put to such shifts to accommodate the vast array of exhibits in all departments. The tables in the various buildings are groaning under their weight of the harvest's offering. Every place was crowded.

An interesting program of amusements was provided for each day of the fair.

The admirers of horse flesh were given an opportunity to see some hotly contested trotting and pacing races, during the week.

Dr. Carver and the Kilpatricks were a feature of each day's program and contributed largely to the general enjoyment. The doctor was at his best, and his most difficult feats were performed with ease and certainty. The Kilpatricks, attired in natty maroon bicycle costumes, performed many difficult and dangerous feats, notably the descent of Mr. Kilpatrick, who is minus a leg, of a 75 foot stairway.

The Twin Cities vied with each other in furnishing evening entertainments for the thousands of visitors.

ONE WAY TO TRAVEL.

How Bill Smith and His "Ole Woman" Covered 1,100 Miles.

A little, faded old woman an ordinary huckster's cart filled with what evidently included all the household effects of the party, a healthy-looking bareheaded girl, seated astride the effects in question, and a black cat drew a curious crowd to the corner of Twelfth and Grand avenue Kansas City, recently.

The woman was clad in plainest calico, her feet were bare and her head was protected by a hideous sunbonnet. She had rested the front of the cart on the curbstone and said she was waiting for the appearance of her "ole man, who was hunting table salt." The child stared stolidly at the gathering crowd and thoughtfully pulled the cat's tail, to which the outraged feline made an indignant protest.

A patrolman came up and made the crowd move on, the woman ejaculating volubly:

"It jes' makes me 'shamed t' hev people git 'round me so. 'Pears ez if they hed nathin' else t' do. I ain't doin' nathin' 'cept restin' up a bit till my ole man comes."

Here the old man turned up and ordered his little caravan to march. The little woman, who is not over four feet six in height, picked up the handle bar of the cart and trotted off down the street, her bare feet pattering on the hard pavement. Her husband, a great, strapping, six-footer slouched on behind.

To a Kansas City Times reporter the husband claimed the name of Bill Smith, and said he and "Marthy," his "ole woman," were members of the Cherokee tribe of Indians.

"Marthy, she's part Irish and part Dutch an' part Cherokee, an' I dunno what the kid is," he said.

"We's from Abbyville, Virginny, now an' Marthy an' me ev footed it all th' way. We come through Wes' Virginny an' Kaintuck an' Injianny an' Illinoy an' cross Missoury. We's goin' t' the nation by way of Coffeyville, Kan. Did Marthy pull that truck all the way? Of course she did. Who else'd do hit?"

"Marthy," has already dragged the cart nearly 1,100 miles, and has 250 more to go before her long overland journey is ended.

REFLECTED HER PROFESSION.

Her Dress and Hair Betrayed That She Was a Schoolma'am.

"How unconsciously men and women take on the atmosphere of their surroundings and avocations," remarked a man recently to a New York Advertiser reporter. "I can recall an illustration of that fact in an experience I had some years ago. I had been so long accustomed to the association of women school teachers that I am rarely mistaken when I come in contact with one. A prominent woman teacher from a northern city was expected at an educational meeting. I had never seen her, but received a telegram asking me to meet her at the train. I was sure I would be able to identify her. I went through the train, which was crowded with passengers. I looked around and soon found the teacher. She was perfectly astonished when I came up and said; 'Is this Miss Blank?'

"'Yes, that is my name,' she replied, 'but how did you know me?'

"I did not explain, but it was easy enough. At first glance I saw her hair was short, that she wore eye-glasses and had on a plain looking sort of gray cloth dress. Any doubts I might have had were soon relieved as I noticed hanging from her watch fob a small globe, being a miniature of the earth. Another earmark was a small hand satchel that snapped loudly when she closed it. I knew I could not be mistaken, and results showed I correctly diagnosed the profession of that woman."

OVER-WEIGHT BAGGAGE.

Reason Why the Man Refused to Pay Extra Charges.

The following incident occurred at a railway station near Rochdale, says the Florida Times-Union. A young man was standing beside some luggage waiting for a train when a porter came up to him and said:

"Sir, that luggage is over-weight."

"Who says it is?" asked the man, who stammered badly.

"Well, I think it is," answered the porter, "but we will weigh it."

During the conversation a crowd had collected round them, and another porter came up and asked what was the matter. The man stammered out:

"F—irst he says it is over-weight; then he—says he th—inks it is over-weight, and th—en he says he will weigh it."

The porters then took hold of the luggage and carried it to the office and weighed it.

"It is over-weight and you have got 50 cents to pay," said Porter No. 1.

"Sh—a'n't pay it," the man said.

"Well, if you won't pay it we shall fetch the station master," said the porter.

"Fetch wh—o you like; sh—a'n't pay it," again stammered the man.

The station master was duly fetched and on arriving asked what the bother was about, when the man again said:

"F—irst he says it is over-weight, and then he th—inks it's over-weight, and then he weighs it, and says it is over-weight, and I have 50 cents to pay."

"Well," said the station master in a rage "why won't you pay it?"

"Because it is not my luggage," answered the man and walked off.

Baggagemen's Bicycle Troubles.

Railway men have come to the conclusion that so great is the number of wheels consigned to railways by passengers that special cars will have to be provided, separate and distinct from baggage cars, for the transportation of the machines. An idea of the number of wheels that are now carried is conveyed in the report of the baggage department of the Rio Grande railway, which shows that in the month of July, 1664 wheels were checked by the company over their line—an average of over 53 daily for the month. In many baggage cars racks have already been fitted up for the reception of wheels, but the accommodation is daily becoming more inadequate. This rush of wheels has given a great deal of anxiety to the baggagemen, who often find themselves without proper means of providing for their custody. The consequence is that a compromise is effected, and if the baggageman keeps a careful eye on a wheel a fee is in order. Some companies are considering the question of charging a small rate on all wheels carried on their trains on the ground that they cannot be packed together like trunks or ordinary baggage; but there is no doubt that such a charge would be grudgingly paid.

The Audibility of Fog Horns at Sea.

Some time ago a description was given of certain experiments in this country which went to prove that around each siren there is a zone, about one and one-half nautical miles broad, within which fog signals cannot be heard, although they are distinctly heard outside that zone. These observations were in many quarters treated with incredulity, but recent experiments have confirmed their accuracy, and the subject is now occupying a great deal of attention in naval circles. In one of the late tests a vessel steamed with the wind straight toward the lightship from a distance of four and one-half nautical miles. The sound, which became faintly audible at a distance of two and three-fourth miles, suddenly increased in loudness at two and one-half miles, retaining the same intensity up to two miles distance. From one and three-fourth miles to one and one-half miles the note was scarcely audible, but then it all at once increased to such an extent that it appeared to originate in the immediate neighborhood of the vessel. The steamer at this point reversed its course, and the fluctuations over the return part of the course were found to be the same, except that it was even more strongly marked. Reversing again, the vessel steamed over the course a third time, and again the sound disappeared at one and one-half miles, and reappeared again, so loud that the fog horn seemed to be only two cables' length off. At one-half mile the sound died out entirely, to come back at a quarter of a mile from the lightship, after which it gradually and steadily increased in volume, until the ship was reached. This question, which is of great practical importance, deserves systematic investigation.

To Preserve Trees From Moths.

A tree-planting expert says that it will be entirely the fault of the people of any community if their trees are devastated by caterpillars as badly next year as they have been in many places within the last few months. The tussock moth has done most of the mischief in Eastern states. In the North it has been single-blooded this year; in the South it was double-blooded. If any more caterpillars appear in any district this season they should be promptly destroyed. If they should show up in great numbers the trees should be sprayed with London purple, not stronger than one-fourth of a pound to fifty gallons of water, or the leaves may suffer. During the fall and winter all the masses of eggs from trees, fences, houses, etc., should be gathered and destroyed, and all decaying and unnecessary trees should be removed particularly where many eggs are found. The trees that have too thick a growth should be pruned and their dead branches cleared out, particularly in the case of maples. Many of their branches have been killed by the maple scale of several years ago, and by the borings of the leopard moth of this year. The tussock moth has utilized these sheltered places by spinning in them the cocoon which contains its eggs. In the meantime, make preparations for next spring, and if the moth appears in any place spray the trees with London purple. Remove all cotton bands. They are unsightly, and in many places conceal the eggs.

The Cause of Death in Electric Shock.

The theory of the disintegrating effect of the electrical current upon brain and nerve tissues in persons electrocuted has been controverted by Dr. A. M. Bielle. Dr. Bielle holds that death in electric shocks is entirely owing to the contraction of the arteries, produced by the current through its influence on the nervous system. The effect of this constriction is that the heart fails in its attempt to overcome the mechanical impediment arising from the greatly retarded flow of blood. In the course of investigations on this subject, it has been found that where drugs have been given to counteract the constrictive effect of the current, much larger doses of electricity than the ordinary can be borne. This fact can not but have a bearing upon the much disputed question of resuscitation after electrocution. Notwithstanding the apparently conclusive testimony which has been given on this subject, it is still believed by some medical experts that given a criminal who has had an exceptional capacity for resisting the electric shock—and this capacity varies in every one—and his power of resistance be still further increased by a dose of the drug mentioned, the effect of the electrocuting current would be so far modified as to make it possible to resuscitate the body after the execution, even though signs of apparent death were exhibited.

The First Horse that Ever Lived.

There is a Greek legend telling how Athens came by its name, and there is a noble horse who plays a prominent part in the legend. If we are to believe the story he was the first real flesh and blood horse of which we have any account. Some men say that he was the first animal of the kind that ever lived, but this is doubtful. Snowy white, without spot or blemish from the tip of his ears to the tips of his amber hoofs, how he must have astonished the simple-minded folk of Cecropia when he leaped right out of the earth at their feet! If you should ever go to Athens and climb to the top of that wonderful hill called the Acropolis, look around you. You may see the very spot where it all is said to have happened.—"The Ship of the Plains," by James Baldwin, in St Nicholas.

A Paralytic Cured.

His Grandfather, a Revolutionary Soldier, and His Father, Both Died of Paralysis, Yet the Third Generation Is Cured—The Method.

(From the Herald, Boston, Mass.)

Like a thunderbolt from a clear sky, a stroke of paralysis came to Mr. Frank T. Ware, the well known Boston auctioneer and appraiser, at 235 Washington street. He went to bed one night about six years ago seemingly in robust health. When he awoke his left side was stiffened by the deadening of the nerves. The interviewer sought out Mr. Ware to get the facts. He gave the interesting particulars in his own way:

"The first shock came very suddenly while I was asleep, but it was not lasting in its effects, and in a few weeks I was able to be about. A few months after, when exhausted by work and drenched with rain I went home in a very nervous state. The result was a second and more severe shock, after which my left arm and leg were practically helpless.

"My grandfather, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary War, and lost an arm in the struggle for American independence, died finally of paralysis. My father also died of paralysis, although it was complicated with other troubles, and so I had some knowledge of the fatal character of the disease which is hereditary in our family. After the second shock I took warning, for, in all probability, a third would carry me off.

"Almost everything under the sun was recommended to me and I tried all the remedies that seemed likely to do any good, electricity, massage and specialists, but to no effect.

"The only thing I found that helped me was Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I verily believe that if it hadn't been for those pills I would have been dead years ago.

"Yes, I still have a slight reminder of the last attack six years ago. My left arm is not as strong as the other and my left foot drags a little, as the paralysis had the effect of deadening the nerves. But I can still walk a good distance, talk as easily as ever, and my general health is splendid. I am really over seventy years old, although I am generally taken to be twenty years younger.

"The Pink Pills keep my blood in good condition, and I believe that is why I am so well.

Mr. Ware has every appearance of a perfectly healthy man, and arrives at his office promptly at eight o'clock every morning, although he has reached an age when many men retire from active life. He says that in his opinion both his father and grandfather could have been saved if Pink Pills had been obtainable at that time.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y., at 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

Fifty Per Cent in His Favor.

I came along to the gate of a humble cabin in a town in Alabama just as an old negro handed a couple of jugs to his son, who was about ten years of age, and said:

"Now, Julius, yo' gwan down to the grocery an' git a quart of 'lasses in one ob dem jugs an' hurry back."

When the boy had gone I said to the father:

"You didn't tell him to get anything in the other jug. Is he going to leave it at the grocery?"

"No, sah—gwan to bring it right back home," he replied.

"But why send two jugs to get a quart of molasses?"

"It's jess dis way, sah. If he only took one jug he'd be powerfu' suah to bump it or drap it an' lose de 'lasses. If he takes two he's jess as liable to drap de empty one as de 'lasses one, an' dat makes de odds in my favor. Anything else yo'd like to ax about, white man?"

Wait Till the Summer Comes.

A good story is related of a small tradesman in a Welsh town. A short time ago a large lake near the town became frozen over for the first time in many years, and large numbers of people from a neighboring city came over for the purpose of enjoying some skating. As this sport was a novelty to the residents, they became also desirous of entering into it, and besieged the local ironmonger for skates.

Incredible as it may appear, this individual had never heard of such articles, but, disdaining to admit his ignorance, replied that he had not any in stock. Wearied at last, however, by repeated orders for skates he remarked to his wife:

"Mary, we must lay in a stock of these skates, for, look you, if there's such a great demand for them now, what will it be in summer when the tourists come?"—Tit-Bits.

The Black Diamond.

There is a stone called black diamond, and it is exactly what it is called. Diamonds are seldom water white, as jewelers say, but are oftener tinged with yellow or brown. When these colors are positive they increase the value of the stone, but when they only a shade they cheapen it. Blue, green, yellow, pink, and brown diamonds are greatly prized when they are deep in color and clear. The black diamond is less of a rarity and has little beauty, although it is sought by collectors when it can be had without flaw. In form, in weight, in hardness, in composition it is the same as the transparent diamond and owes its blackness to bits of carbon that have failed to crystallize. Usually diamonds that are black or spotted, or otherwise off color or are too greatly flawed for use as gems are broken up into drill points and into powder for cutting and polishing.—Brooklyn Eagle.

A Plague of Bees.

Some time ago it was announced that bee farming had been taken up at Gennevilliers, one of the most loathsome industrial suburbs of Paris. This was treated as a joke, but the news is, our correspondent says, nevertheless true, and the prefect of the Seine has just received a petition from the inhabitants to abate the nuisance. The bees live upon the sugar refineries of the neighborhood, clearing away all the dust on the roofs and even landing on the bare backs of the workmen. It has been stated by a sugar refiner that every hive in the neighborhood carries away 20 shillings' worth of sugar in a year from the factories. He does not, however, complain of this loss, but of the irritation the perpetual buzz inflicts on the workmen.

Iron Filings for the Soil.

Northern fruit growers know that the color of fruit is largely dependent on the amount of available potash which the soil contains. This, with sunlight aids in the development of both color and fine flavor. A California orange grower, Mr. G. W. Prescott, has found that iron heightened the color of his product and made it more salable. His oranges were originally very pale, but by using five pounds of iron filings around his trees the color has been changed to a dark yellow, with increased quality of fruit. So much iron filings probably made the soil more open and porous. If the iron has served as plant food a small quantity would have been sufficient.

A New Electric Tricycle.

Charles H. Burrows of Willimantic, Conn., has invented an electric carriage which he is confident is the most practical yet made. It is built in the form of a tricycle, the forward wheel being the driving wheel. This wheel is constructed with two rubber-tired rims, between which is what corresponds with the sprocket in the bicycle. The electric motor is carried in a box over the driver, and is connected with it by a sprocket chain. The power is stored in a battery between the two rear wheels, and is carried to the motor by flexible wires. A seat capable of carrying from one to three persons is over the small rubber or pneumatic tire wheels. The guiding device is similar to that of the ordinary bicycle. The frame is of the bicycle style, and strong enough to do the work.

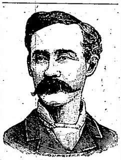
RUN SHORT ON FOOD.

PEARY AND HIS COMPANIONS ALMOST STARVED TO DEATH.

The Relief Steamer Kite, With Lieut. Peary and Hugh J. Lee, With His Colored Servants, Returns From the Arctic Region.

St. John's, N. F., Sept. 24. — The Peary steamer Kite has arrived with Peary and friends on board. The Kite sailed from St. John's on July 11 for Peary's headquarters in Greenland. On board the steamer was a company of scientists under the direction of Emil Diebitch, a brother of Mrs. Peary. Included in the number were Prof. Salisbury, of Chicago university; Prof. Dyche, of the Kansas State university; Theodore De Bouteller of Philadelphia and John D. Walsh of Washington. At the time of sailing hope was expressed that the party would be back at St. John's by the end of September, and the arrival of the steamer to-day justifies the expectation.



Lieut. Peary.

On the arrival of the Kite, Lieut. Peary and Hugh J. Lee, with his colored servant, were found safe on board. They were found at Whale sound on Aug. 3 waiting for the Kite, and had only ten days previously returned from a great overland expedition which proved a comparative failure. Many sensational stories are current among the crew of the extremities to which Peary, Lee and Hensen were reduced. According to the stories, which the explorers decline to deny, they were almost starved, and were forced to eat seal and other refuse to keep them alive.

All three owe their lives to the shooting of eight musk oxen, but during the journey they had to sacrifice the weaker dogs and feed the flesh to the others, for it was necessary to sustain some of the animals as long as possible to enable their supplies and instruments to be brought along. Out of forty-nine dogs which started only one returned alive, and all five sledges were abandoned during the two days just prior to the return of the party to Anniversary Lodge. Their safe return they looked upon as almost a miracle, as during those last two days hardly a particle of food passed the mouths of any of them, and the struggle to reach their home was one of ever increasing suffering. When the relief expedition reached Anniversary Lodge the Peary party were showing marked evidences of their terrible experiences.

Lieut. Peary was extremely noncommital in regard to the expedition generally, and all of the party declined to express an opinion on the work done, nor would they state what new discoveries have been made. The Kite's cruise, after finding Peary, was not prolific of results, or if it was, not much is being said of the nature of the discoveries. A number of walrus and seal were shot for museum specimens, and Prof. Gyche made an unusually large collection of birds at Holsteinburg. The two meteorites which were found were of large size, one weighing about three tons. The great iron stone reported by Sir John Ross, which was also came upon, could not be got off owing to its unwieldy size and enormous weight.

Killed in a Landslide.

Quebec, Sept. 24.—A report comes from St. Luc, Champlain county, of a disastrous landslide on the Champlain river Saturday night. Zephirin Normandin's house was carried away and five members of the family were buried in the debris. Three children escaped by jumping through the windows, one of whom has since become insane as the result of the calamity. After great difficulty the residents of the vicinity succeeded in digging out the five dead bodies. Further destruction is almost certain, as the river is blocked with the detached earth and the river bank is being inundated at other points.

DAMAGES FOR LIBEL.

A Virginia Paper Brought to Terms by the American Book Company.

A dispatch from Norfolk, Va., says: "The American Book company of New York has just gained a signal victory in the courts of Virginia and has received an absolute and complete vindication after a long and exhaustive trial by special jury in the Circuit court of this city. The Pilot newspaper of this city, upon the awarding of the contract for school books to the American Book company, printed a long article written and prepared by R. E. Byrd, an agent and attorney for Ginn & Co., of New York, in which it was charged that the state superintendent had been bribed by the American Book company. The Pilot was immediately sued for libel, and, after a five weeks' trial, which created an immense amount of interest throughout the state, a verdict for punitive damages was recently awarded, and the jury found that the statements made were false and a deliberate libel. Not only so, but the company, upon unimpeachable evidence, was proved to have dealt honorably and uprightly in every particular in their negotiations with the state officials. It was further proved at the trial that no better terms had been made with any other state for school books. In fact, the attorney-general of Virginia stated that the American Book company 'seemed to throw open their whole business to us,' and after full and complete examination of all the original contracts made with the various states he expressed himself as absolutely satisfied that the prices were the same in all cases and that no discrimination whatever had been made against the state of Virginia. Furthermore he mentioned that none of the statements of the American Book company had been accepted until every one of them had been absolutely verified by direct reference to the governors of some fifteen states, with whom contracts had been made. This proved conclusively that the representations of the American Book company were correct in toto. This celebrated case has thus ended in a complete triumph in every respect for the American Book company, and has shown in clear contrast the clean and business-like methods in which they carry on their great industry as compared with the attempted use of political pulls and misstatements by their opponents."—Chicago Tribune.

POLICE INTERFERE.

Mowbray, the English Anarchist, Compeled to Quit Speaking.

Chicago, Sept. 24.—Charles Wilfred Mowbray, the English anarchist who came here to teach the doctrine of red flag and no government, was stopped in the middle of a speech at Belmont Park by the police. He was so badly frightened that after a few words of explanation in which he said that he did not mean to teach violence, he hurriedly left the platform and made his escape in the crowd. Mowbray has been denounced by the trade and labor assembly, the central body of trades unionists here, and the attendance at the park to-day was small. Police Inspector Schaack, of the North district, made preparations to nip in the bud any kind of a radical demonstration to-day. Mowbray started in by abusing the police and newspapers. Inspector Schaack bore this without interference, but when the speaker began berating the stars and stripes and hoping for the glorious day when the red emblem would be raised triumphantly aloft, the inspector gave the sign which Capt. Schuettler, who was on the platform, laid a heavy hand on the shoulder of the speaker. Mowbray stammered and looked dismayed and attempted an explanation, but the big police captain quietly said: "You have got to stop that kind of talk," and that settled it. Richard Braunschweig, a loud-mouthed radical who can scarcely speak a word of English, managed to get on the platform and attempted to shove Schuettler to one side. He was promptly seized by two detectives.

For thirty years the Royal has been the standard for purity and strength in baking powders, and has been placed at the head by every board of official examiners, whether State or National.

RATHER CHILLY.

The Temperature in the West Takes a Sudden Drop.

Chicago, Sept. 24.—Relief from the sweltering weather of the past week reached this city shortly after eight o'clock last night, when a cold wave, accompanied by a drifting, chilling rain which sent pedestrians hurrying to their homes, arrived. The thermometer dropped from 86 to 56. The barometer indicates storms which will be welcome visitors after the scorching days through which the city has just passed. The day was excessively hot and the wind seemed ladened with heat and only added to the general suffering. At 7 o'clock there was no indication of the change which came on an hour later. The past seven days broke all records for heat for September in this city and throughout the Northwest. There were ten deaths from the heat and numerous prostrations.

Dispatches to the Associated Press from many points in Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota and Wisconsin report a drop in the temperature to nearly the same figures. At nearly all points which have been heard from the change was ushered in by a violent wind storm, which at some points did considerable damage. In Northern Wisconsin the wind was accompanied by a heavy rain, some points reporting a fall of from one-half to an inch in less than an hour. Telegraphic communication with the Northwest was seriously crippled by the storm.

Water Stolen.

Neenah, Wis., Sept. 24.—The discovery has been made that somebody has been stealing water and that the provisions of the recent privilege granted by the war department to the suffering mill men are being disregarded. Instead of the prescribed 40,000 cubic feet of water per minute granted to water power users, 50,000 cubic feet or even more are being taken from Lake Winnebago each minute during the working day.

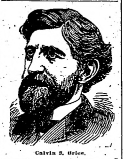
A Suspect Arrested.

New London, Wis., Sept. 24.—This forenoon the authorities arrested an unknown man on suspicion of having been connected with the Wisconsin Central train robbery at Waupaca. The prisoner is a middle-aged man. He has on a gray suit of clothes and carried quite a sum of money and a revolver. He refused to talk and will not give his name. The prisoner was taken to Waupaca. The county is being thoroughly scoured by officers, and it is expected that other suspects will be landed behind the bars.

OHIO DEMOCRATS.

They Will Soon Open Their Fall Campaign.

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 24.—Arrangements are being made by Senator Brice to open the fall campaign for the Democrats. Calvin S. Brice was born at Denmark, Ohio, in 1845, and educated at Miami university, Oxford. Throughout the late war he served the Union, and at its close studied law in the University of Michigan, and in 1866 he was admitted to the bar. Since 1876 he has been a leading Democratic politician of Ohio, and for many years a conspicuous figure at all times in the councils of the nation and in the financial and railroad affair of the country. In January, 1890, he was elected to the United States senate to succeed Henry B. Payne. His term of service will expire in 1897.



Calvin S. Brice.

The statistics show that there is used in the manufacture of the Royal Baking Powder more than half of all the cream of tartar consumed in the United States for all purposes. The wonderful sale thus indicated for the Royal Baking Powder—greater than that of all other baking powders combined—is perhaps the highest evidence of the superiority of this article, and of its indispensableness to modern cookery.

EVERYBODY HELD UP.

A Bold Gang of Highwaymen Operate in Pittsburg.

Pittsburg, Sept. 24.—Shadyside, the handsome portion of the East end, was the scene last night of one of the most daring robbery in Pittsburg's history. The thieves were five in number, and for more than an hour before midnight they gave the residents of that part of the city a vivid representation of the wild lawlessness of the road agents in the old days on the Western frontier. From 11 o'clock until nearly 12 they lurked about various parts of Seville street and Center avenue, levying toll from any hapless pedestrian that chanced along, and by the boldness and cleverness of their plan of conduct, escaping the police. Their culminating piece of dare-devil lawlessness was the holding up of a Duquesne electric car and the robbery of its passengers.

The wind was blowing at the rate of forty miles an hour and the fire department could do nothing to stop the progress of the flames, although assistance from neighboring cities was received. The lumber yards contained 10,000,- feet of lumber, valued at $175,000. The saw mill cost $25,000. The insurance on the lumber is $80,000 and on the saw mill $15,000. WORK OF THE CUBANS

ANOTHER STORY OF THE WRECK OF THE SPANISH CRUISER.

It is Now Stated to Be an Absolute Fact That the Vessel Was Sunk by a Floating Torpedo Fired by a Party of Adventurous Cubans.

Philadelphia, Sept. 24.—An entirely different explanation of the sinking of the Spanish cruiser Barcastegui and the loss of forty-six lives in the Harbor of Havana on last Wednesday night is made in letters received in this city to-day by a distinguished member of the Cuban revolutionary party. According to the news telegraphed from Havana the day after the catastrophe was due to a collision between the cruiser and the merchant steamer Mortera. It is now stated as an absolute fact that the Barcastegui was sunk by a floating torpedo launched by an adventurous party of Cubans. The Cuban leader who received the letter said:

"The Spanish government knows full well what sunk their best cruiser in the Cuban waters and sent to their deaths Admiral Delgado Perejo, in command of the Spanish navy in Cuban waters, seven officers and thirty-four men. We know here that before the dispatch was sent it was carefully edited by the press censor. The advices which I have received said that on Monday night a party of Cubans under the command of Capt. Carlos Enrique, left Guantanamo in a steam launch, which was the recent invention of an American. It was an ingenius device so constructed that it could be launched some distance away from the object aimed to be destroyed, and then by a piece of clockwork, explode in about fifteen minutes after it is sent out. The little party on the steam launch had received these torpedo launches only a week before. Capt. Enrique selected a point about 200 yards from the war vessel from which to launch the torpedo. It was slipped out and as soon as it was gone Capt. Enrique gave orders to steam away as rapidly as possible. The work of the torpedo was even more speedy than anticipated. Not five minutes elapsed before it exploded with a loud report that was heard several miles away. From what those on the boat say it must have gone off about thirty feet away from the cruiser and struck her in the starboard side. It is true that the merchant steamer Mortera was near the war vessel at the time and that she, too, suffered damage, but it was not serious by any means, and if the men on board of her had kept their heads they might have saved some of the lives of those on board the Spanish cruiser."

There is no baking powder which produces such sweet and tasteful food as the Royal Baking Powder.

The humidity was low, however, there being only 40 per cent of moisture in the atmosphere.

Flood Cuba With Soldiers.

London, Sept. 24.—The Times' Havana correspondent says recently reinforcements of 2,000 infantry and 400 cavalry have landed at Santiago de Cuba; 2,000 infantry and 200 cavalry at Guantanamo; 1,000 infantry at Manzanill; 3,500 infantry at Nueritas and the remainder in the Province of Santa Clara. Lengthy telegrams from Madrid published yesterday state positively that Spain will send further 25,000 men in October and an equal number in January, and if necessary they are prepared to increase the army in Cuba to 200,000.

MARK TWAIN.

The Great American Author Lectures in Australia.

Melbourne, Sept. 21.—Mr. Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain), the American author, gave his first lecture in Australia last night, and was greeted by a large and appreciative audience. Mr. Clemens, who is in very poor health, and has met with a great financial disaster, is on a voyage around the world in the hope that change of air and freedom from worry may avert the collapse which appears to threaten him. He is accompanied by his wife and daughter and Mr. and Mrs. Pond. His financial failure will compel him to start afresh in the battle of life at a time when he should be resting as a reward for his years of labor. This world famed humorist was born in Missouri 60 years ago. When he was but 12 years old his father died, and he was placed in a printing office as an apprentice immediately after. From 17 to 24 he was a Mississippi river pilot. He began his literary work in 1862, and his career since then is known by every one. His most popular work is "Innocents Abroad," written in 1867. Other books followed very quickly from his pen, among them being the following: "Roughing It," "The Golden Age," Tom Sawyer," "Prince and Pauper," and several others.

NEW JERSEY REPUBLICANS.

John W. Griggs Receives the Nomination for Governor.

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 21.—The Republican state convention met here to-day and nominated John W. Griggs of Union county, ex-state senator and a prominent lawyer, for governor. Because of the fact that the Republicans are very hopeful of success this fall, the convention attracted to the city more of the rank and file of the party than has been seen at a similar gathering for over twenty years, and there was a genuine effort on the part of half a dozen gentlemen to secure the coveted nomination, which finally fell to Mr. Griggs on the third ballot. On questions of national import, the platform says:

"We reaffirm our devotion to the national policy of our party; our opposition to any attempt to impose upon this country a debased or depreciated currency, and our firm belief in the wisdom and beneficence of a tax upon imports which will afford protection to American industry and adequate revenue."

CRUISER GOES DOWN.

Spanish Man-of-War Sunk by a Merchantman.

Havana, Sept. 21.—The cruiser Barcastegui was wrecked at midnight by coming in collision with the merchant steamer Mortera, in the canal at the entrance of Port Barcastegui. Marine General Dolgado Parejo and three other officers and 30 of the crew were drowned. Gen. Parejo's body was recovered. Capt. Ybañez's body was also recovered, but in a badly mutilated condition, indicating that he had been crushed in the collision. The cruiser Barcastegui had been employed in doing government business between different ports of the Island of Cuba. The Barcastegui was a third-class cruiser, carrying five heavy and two rapid-fire guns. She was of 1,000 tons displacement. Gen. Dolgado Parejo was commander of the Spanish naval forces in Cuba. He arrived on the island on June 17 from Spain.

WELSH PRESBYTERIANS.

Minneapolis, Sept. 21.—The national triennial assembly of the Welsh Presbyterian church convened at the little Welsh church on Seventeenth avenue south and Franklin street this afternoon with a fair sized attendance. The session was entirely devoted to routine business. Rev. John R. Daniel of Wisconsin was chosen as the new moderator. Rev. John Hammond of Philadelphia was chosen clerk for the ensuing three years. The retiring clerk gave a series of encouraging statistics. The total membership of the church was shown to be 12,285; children, 4,742; Sabbath school, 13,257; adherents, 17,131.

Major Baldwin has been down to Washington lately for the purpose of urging the department to open up the agricultural lands of the Red Lake reservation to homestead settlement, and the newspapers report him as sanguine of success. From one point of view it is apparent that the Major has good grounds for hope, as he is a gold money man, while Towne is a silverite. The administration is gold money and would probably like to see Baldwin back in congress, where opening of these lands to settlement would go a long ways to putting him. But there is more than a member of congress back of it all, unless we are misinformed as congress must in some manner compensate either the state or the Indians for the school sections and the swamp lands lying within the reservation an no such act has been passed. It is eminently desirable, however, that these lands should be opened to settlement this fall, and we hope Mr. Baldwin's efforts will be crowned with success, and that the interior department will simply except the school and swamp lands from its proclamation opening them to entry.—Thirteen Towns.

C. O. Christianson returned to-day from a months work on the state board of equalization. During the annual session the board has gone over the work of assessors in the state in a thorough manner and their work is commended by all outside of the large cities. The valuation of country districts was held at about the figures which ruled last year. Polk county being slightly reduced. The cities of St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth were raised on goods and merchandise, and on bank valuation. The former two 10 per cent and the latter half as much. Beside this five of the Minneapolis banking institutions were subjected to an arbitrary assessment which will add nearly $1,000,0.0 to the bank valuation. Telegraph and telephone companies were also increased 10 per cent.— Crookston Times.

At 7;30 on Saturday night there disappeared in the gloom and mist three livery rigs, each containing at least five deputy sheriffs, They were under command of Sheriff Steenerson, and Co: Atty. Gossman was a member of the party. They took the road leading in the direction of East Grand Forks, and they kept it, until that city was reached, Here they divided each rig going seperate places, and preparing for active work, At an agreed signal they entered the saloons of Dan Sullivan, W. D. Russel and Billy Franklyn and took possession. Their expectations was to find gambling in full blast and arrest all who were interested. They found no open games running as the keepers had been notified of their coming. In each place they found some of the tools and implements usually used by gamblers of which they took possession, They found in place two crap tables, one roulette table, one stud poker table, beside some other of the various things to the successful fleecing of suckers. In Sullivan's, something like a thousand new chips were confiscated which had been used, and which were stored away in a closet,

There were a few chips in the table drawers which had been overlooked, but nearly everthing was secreted or carried away before the minions of the law arrived. The property was left there at the time, and Messers. Sullivan Franklyn and Russell were placed under arrest. Later they were released on their own recognizance upon their promise to appear at Crookston to-day and answer the case. To-day the sheriff sent over for the outfit and all the paraphernalia will be brought over and Stored here to be used as evidence in the case, after which it will be burned

The raid was planned carefully, and the deputies went prepared with handcuffs and sacks with which to secure both the principals and their outfit but some one gave the snap away. The warrants were sworn out by County Attorney Gossman who claims to have proof sufficent to convict.—Crookston Times'

Close competition breeds impetuosity, and in our earnest pushing for trade it often happens that we mark goods away down just for the fun of

We print a likeness of the skeleton of this remarkable palcontological reptile because some of its physical characteristics are synonymous with our business methods. Perhaps the most striking similarity may be found in its

Its little finger is very large; and so are our bargains. The paradox of a little finger being big may be likened to the paradoxical inducements we offer you.

Profits and Hind Feet Small

Its hind feet are out of all proportion to its fore feet, just as our profit is overshadowed by the buyer's. Its large head represents the size of our stock. The many years that have elapsed since the time when this creature flourished will hint at the wearing quality of our goods.

AFTER YEARS.

"Give back my child!" I plead that day,
My face against the coffin lid.
"Here is the place upon my breast;
Not there in cold and darkness hid.
Why, he had just begun to live—
To know my face, to laugh, to reach
His hands to meet my lips and make Sweet essays at some unknown speech.

"Untrodden round his baby feet
The whole fair realm of childhood lay,
Nor stones nor thorn to make them bleed.
My hand had smoothed them all away.
No wind of heaven had buffeted
His sunny head with cruel breath.
My arms had safely sheltered him.
Give him to me, O Death!"

Now, standing by that little grave
Where in and out the passing years
Weave tapestries of green and gold,
I smile, remembering my tears.
I lay my gray head on the mound
That drank my tears, and 'neath my breath
I whisper: "It is better so.
Keep him, O gentle Death!"

English Evergreens and Hedges.

A peculiar feature of England, and especially of the southern part of it, is the great variety of evergreens of a hardy nature to be seen on every hand. I do not mean pines, firs and like sorts, but those of the character of the laurel and the rhododendron, broad leaved ones, as they are called. They are everywhere, both as single specimens and hedges. The lawns and pleasure grounds have a dense appearance because of this, which nothing else could give as well. The English laurel is the one usually used for hedges. This is the one known as Cerasus lauro-cerasus It is not hardy with us, but I am almost sure I have seen it living out at Washington about the capitol grounds. Speaking of hedges, they are almost altogether made of the common hawthorn here, Crataegus oxyacantha. That is to say, the roadside and division hedges are. But in many of these hedges all sorts of things have found lodgment The English woodbine, the virgin's bower (Clematis vitalba), elms, maples and oaks sprout up from seeds dropped by birds, and these interlopers give variety and beauty to the long line of hedges. And the English ivy is everywhere, in hedges and up the trees, all tending to break the formality of long lines of hedges.—Isle of Wight Correspondent.

School Board Essays.

At a recent board school examination for girls one of the tasks was an essay on boys, and this was one of the compositions, just as it was handed in, by a girl of 12:

"The boy is not an animal, yet they can be heard to a considerable distance. When a boy hollers, he opens his big mouth like frogs, but girls hold their tongue till they are spoke to, and then they answer respectable and tell just how it was. A boy thinks himself clever because he can wade where it is deep, but God made the dry land for every living thing and rested on the seventh day. When the boy grows up, he is called a husband, and then he stops wading and stays out nights, but the grow up girl is a widow and keeps house."—Bombay Gazette.

Spider's Sight.

Experiments have been made to decide how far spiders can see, and it has been determined that they have a range of vision of at least a foot. It is not always possible to tell, however, whether the lower animals perceive by sight or hearing or by the action air in motion has upon their bodies. Experiments tend to show that mice are sensitive to motions of the air which to human ears create no sound whatever.—Philadelphia Ledger.

And He Howled.

The small boy was playing cowboy, more to his own satisfaction than that of his nervous father.

"I am the Wild Wolf of Bitter creek," he yelled.

"And this is your night to howl," said the exasperated parent, appearing with a strap. And Willie howled.—Cincinnati Tribune.

Worry.

It is not work that kills men. It is worry. Work is healthy. You can hardly put more upon a man than he can bear. Worry is rust upon the blade. It is not the revolution that destroys the machinery, but the friction.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Goethe's Works.

Friedrich Spielhagen, the novelist, delivered the oration at the meeting of the Goethe society at Weimar. He asserted that "Werther" and "Hermann and Dorothea" will survive, whatever becomes of Goethe's other works.

Duty.

Every duty, even the least duty, involves the whole principle of obedience. The commonest life may be full of perfection. The duties of home are a discipline for the ministries of heaven.—H. E. Manning.

FALLING SCIENTIFICALLY.

Accidents to Circus Performers Often Avoided by Skill and Knowledge.

There is never a moment when a rider in the circus ring is entirely free from danger. Of course the various feats become easy enough of accomplishment after long practice, but the performers can never be sure at what moment their skill and experience will be set at naught through some failure of the horse to do what is expected of him. Suppose the horse shies while the rider is standing on his back preparing for a spring. The chances are ten to one that a fall will result, and yet there is no sure way of knowing when a horse is about to shy. The most trifling thing may cause him to do so. A sudden crash of music, the fall of a programme thrown carelessly into the ring, a ray of sunshine striking him unexpectedly in the eyes, the creaking of a pulley, any one of a hundred things; swerving a few inches to the right or left, a sudden dart forward, will be more than sufficient to upset the delicately poised equilibrium.

Therefore the act of falling is one of the most important, and it is also one of the most difficult of mastery among the circus rider's accomplishments. It is always easy to recognize a veteran circus rider in the way he falls. As soon as he sees that the situation is hopeless, that he must go down, his hands shoot for his knees like a flash, and he hugs himself up automatically into a round ball, with nothing exposed that can break, unless possibly it be a rib or two in some very exceptional case. Usually striking in this way, with the muscles all tense, and the body folded up tight and hard, the rider escapes with a few bruises and a general shaking up.

"I remember the worst fall I ever had as distinctly as if it were last week, although really it was several years ago," remarked a circus rider to me recently. "It seems queer, but it happened when I was sitting astride my horse, walking around the ring quietly after doing an act. All of a sudden something made the horse shy, and before I knew it I was gone—lifted up in the air and turning over, half from habit, I suppose, in a back somersault. I heard the ring master yell at me, and realized that unless I could get round in the turn so as to clear my head I would break my neck in striking. Between that and my reaching the ground was only the small part of a second, but it seemed as if I had oceans of time to argue out the whole situation. I wondered if the horse wouldn't step on me, decided how I had better roll to get away, planned just how I would strike the ground with my shoulders if I managed to save my head, and then I dug my chin down into my breast, body and muscles on that turn.

"Well, it was a close shave. They carried me out senseless, and the doctor said my neck was broken, but it wasn't. It was pretty badly wrenched, though, and I carried my chin pressed against my body for weeks afterward. You can be sure if I hadn't got up some fine speed on that turn there would have been another dead circus rider."

"Do you mean that a circus rider can make himself turn faster or slower after he is in the air?" I asked.

"Certainly I do; that is the most important part of somersault work. You see, no matter how good a man is he can never leave his horse for a turn with exactly the right amount of spring. Sometimes he will throw himself a little too hard and other times not hard enough; it depends partly on the way the horse is going. Well, when he finds himself in the air, say half way around on the turn, he feels—that is, all good circus riders do—by a kind of instinct whether he is turning too fast or not fast enough so as to land right on the horse. Besides that he can see most of the way round just where the horse is and by practice tell whether anything is wrong. Now, suppose he wants to slacken his speed a little, he simply lifts his head straight up, or even a little back, and that acts like putting on a brake. Then, if he sees he is too slow, all he has to do is to bend his head down on his chest in the way I was telling you of, like a bicycle going down hill."—Philadelphia Enquirer.

The Candle.

Professor Crooks thinks that if the electric light were universal today the candle, if suddenly introduced, would be thought a wonderful invention, as it enables a person to obtain light in its simplest and most portable form, and without the use of cumbrous machinery or the necessity of attaching the lamp to any fixed point by means of wire before it could be lighted.—New York Tribune.

A Tough Prelacy.

A journey of nearly 700 miles through the bush was necessary for the new bishop of Mashonaland, South Africa, to reach the center of his diocese, and he says: "It was a very rough journey, with scarcely any sleep and little food. On Sunday afternoon, after many hours' travel in choking dust and heat, we rested for an hour at a wayside shanty of poles and mud. Prospectors were lounging around, and one man had put on a clean shirt, but all were hearty and glad to see the bishop. I expect that I was the only bishop in the world on that particular Sunday, sitting astride a plank cutting slices of 'biltung' with my pocket knife and washing them down with digger tea out of a billy, a sort of tin pot which prospectors carry about."

Metal Wheels for Your Wagons.

The season for cutting corn fodder being close at hand, it may be well for farmers to get a set of these low metal wheels with wide tires. They can be had any size wanted from 20 to 56 inches in diameter, with tires from 1 to 8 inches wide. By having low wheels enables you to bring the wagon box down low, saving one man in loading fodder, etc. It is also very convenient for loading and unloading manure, grain, hogs, etc., and will save in labor alone their cost in a very short time. These wheels are made of best material throughout, and have every possible advantage over the high wooden wheels with narrow tires, and will outlast a dozen of them. There will also be no resetting of tires necessary, and consequently no blacksmiths' bills to pay. Wide tires save your horses and prevent cutting up your fields.

An Expressive Word's Origin.

It is curious that the word "blackguard" came into the language just about the time when coal came into domestic use. In the sixteenth century colliers were far from popular, and in great houses the unliveried menials employed to carry coals to the fires were called "black guards." Putting two and two together, as it were, the word "blackguard" soon became a term of reproach. The reason why colliers were disliked was that coals were for a long time popularly supposed by the ignorant masses to be unwholesome. Thus a man who would carry coals was easily judged capable of almost any indignity. The "knavery of the colliers" of Newcastle is referred to by Decke in 1607, and contemporary and earlier writers have also sneering or depreciatory references.

It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

THE LAST PARADE.

They were days to be remembered,
When at sound of trumpet-call,
Young recruits we left the village,
Bent on glory one and all.
And the music round us flashing
Made us feel that evermore
Our lives were worth the living
As they never were before.
I remember the day
When we all rode away,
To the dreams that the music made,
And our hopes one and all,
When the old trumpet-call
Rang out clear for our first parade.

It was glorious while it lasted,
But the years went by too soon—
Youth should stay a little longer
When a lad's a bold dragoon.
Then, like shadows from us drifting,
Comrades fell in foreign land.
Home again! the roll call found us
But a broken little band.
As we rode down the street
To the old measured beat,
It was tears that the music made,
And it seemed like a prayer
For the lads who would ne'er
Stand again by our side on parade!

But the marching days are over,
Veterans! now at ease we stand,
Till the order comes for marching
To the last and restful land.
Only when the troops are passing,
Our ninety years we all forget,
And the old familiar music
Makes us feel we're soldiers yet.
And we're young once again
As we hark to the strain,
Till the sounds in the distance fade.
So we wait one and all
For the last trumpet call
That shall sound for the last parade.

NUWED'S GROCERY BILL.

"Now," said Mr. Nuwed, after he and his newly wedded wife had settled down comfortably in their new home, "we will have no bills. We will pay cash for everything, and then we will never run behind."

Mrs. Nuwed heartily agreed with this. She was in that stage of domestic development when the young wife considers it her duty to agree with her husband in everything. Later on—but that is another story.

"Yes," continued Mr. Nuwed, warming up to his subject, "we will never be poor while we are free from debt." He should have known this, for during his bachelor days he had been almost constantly dodging creditors, although he always had money in hand. "And especially grocer's bills should be avoided," reaching the point of his lecture. "They pile up so quickly. It's so easy to go to the grocery and have things charged, and then the first thing you know youve got a thumping big bill to pay. And it's always more than you expected."

Evidently Mr. Nuwed's experience had brought him some wisdom in domestic economy, but then it is to be noted that the best preachers of economy are usually its poorest practitioners. Mrs. Nuwed agreed heartily with all that her lord and master said. He was her oracle now, and besides his remarks appealed to her judgment and experience.

Accordingly Mrs. Nuwed proceeded religiously to put these sage precepts into practice. Almost every morning she would ask sweetly:

"Have you any change in your pocket, James?"

"Why," ejaculated Mr. Nuwed. He was thinking of the $5 he had given her the day before.

"Oh, I have that bill yet," interrupted Mrs. Nuwed divining his thought; "but I hate to have it broken. Still we must have some groceries, and you know you said never get anything on trust."

Then Mr. Nuwed would shell out all the small change he had allotted in his mind for street car fare, cigars, &c., and on going down town would be obliged to break a bill himself. Thus by the time salary day rolled around again he usually found himself bankrupt, while Mrs. Nuwed had her allowance snugly saved up. This was comforting, but at the same time annoying to see how she practiced economy seemingly at his expense.

Thus it was that Mr. Nuwed was led into breaking his own ironclad rule about paying cash for everything. It happened one morning after he had been "sitting up with a sick friend," by special permission of Mrs. Nuwed, but "fattening the kitty," had considerably depleted his pile. Consequently, he had no small change, and only one poor little bill, to see him through the week, without borrowing from Mrs. Nuwed. Later—but that is also another story.

Accordingly, when Mrs. Nuwed asked him for change, he quite unexpectedly and unprecedently offered to order the groceries himself. On the way down to the store he argued to himself the question of breaking that bill. Manifestly if he paid for the groceries all the week he would have to go without smoking, and probably have to walk to and from the office. Here was where he yielded to temptation and ordered the groceries charged.

Lighting a good cigar, he proceeded down town very much satisfied with himself, but he received a setback when he found that the grocer had sent the bill up to Mrs. Nuwed. Of course, he explained, that he "forgot to pay," but the rule had been broken and as he continued to forget, Mrs. Nuwed found it much more convenient to get things charged when she had not the change handy. So, every week or so, there was a bouncing big grocery bill to pay, which tried Nuwed's temper sorely.

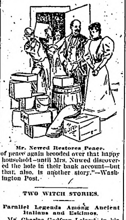
Finally, there was a big family flareup, with the usual accusations and recriminations, in which Nuwed got the worst of it, of course, for had he not been the first to break the cash payment plan. Smarting with this rebuke which he knew to be well deserved, yet resolved to do something desperate to prevent its recurrence, he went down to the bank and drew out $200 of the money they had been saving for a rainy day. That afternoon Mrs. Nuwed was startled by the appearance of a whole procession of drays and grocery wagons before her door. Then stalwart truckmen began to carry into the house barrels of flour, pork, and sugar, half a dozen whole hams, pounds of all sorts of spices and a big chest of tea, not to mention such sundries as salt, preserves, mustard, horseradish, catsup, sardines, olives, baking powder, stove polish, starch, soap, lard lye, lamp wicks, and a dozen boxes of matches.

"What does this mean?" demanded Mrs. Nuwed as her husband marched in with a defiant air that evening.

"It means," said Mr Nuwed firmly, "that it was all my fault, and we are not going to have any more grocery bills. These are all paid for!"

After which the white-winged dove



Mr. Newed Restores Peace.

of peace again brooded over that happy household—until Mrs. Nuwed discovered the hole in their bank account—but that, also, is another story."—Washington Post.

TWO WITCH STORIES.

Parallel Legends Among Ancient Italians and Eskimos.

Mr. Charles Godfrey Leland, in his "Legends of Florence," tells in delightful style the story of the "Witch of the Arno," which tale, condensed, runs somewhat as follows: A pretty maid is loitering by the river side, and says, "I wish in all truth that this dancing river were a fine, brave youth, and I would love him." Then a voice answers from the water, "Thou hast chosen me." Then ever after when she washed in the water she felt her lover's kisses. Being a tidy girl, she was fond of her ablutions, whereas the other girls held water, and possibly soap, in horror. So the poor maid was suspected of sorcery, and "with blows and bitter curses," her enemies threw her into the river, when up rose a beautiful youth from the Arno—the river is specified—and he clasped the maid in his strong arms, and then she cried out: "Farewell to all. A fish cannot drown in the water; now I am a fish, you know—the Arno's loving daughter." Now here is a queer parallel from the extreme North Pacific side of America. It is not de rigueur that an Eskimo girl should be careful of her toilet, for water, though plentiful in summer, is ice in winter. This girl used whale oil to lubricate her long, black hair with, and for a long time no whales had been killed nor blubber tried out. So she sat near the sea and begged for oil, and thus addressed the whale spirit: "Give me oil, O spirit of the whale, and I will love thee; for without thee my hair is unkempt." Then the girl saw floating in toward her on the surface of the water a thick scum of oil, and she took a shell and skimmed the oil, and then for a long time she always had "a heap" of oil. But the other girls were jealous, and, seeing she had always a great store of oil, they pitched her into the sea from off a high rock, and lo! a great whale came swimming in, and he caught the girl and sat her on his back and put out to sea with her, and her wicked comrades heard her say: "This is my true love, my spirit whale, and now will I have lashings of blubber and oil." Is there any connection between the two bits of folklore? Not at all. Italians and Eskimos are equally inventive.—New York Times.

What Antivenine May Do.

Prof. Fraser of Edinburgh has attacked the problem of finding an antidote for snake bite in an entirely different way, and there is every reason to hope that his labors will not be for naught. Starting with the commonly accepted theory, which he finds to be true, that a snake is itself immune to snake poison, he argues that this immunity must be due to the absorbtion in the blood of the poisonous matter. He next procured some venom, chiefly cobra poison, and ascertained by direct experiment the minimum lethal dose to a small animal. The dose was gradually increased without any inconvenience to the animal; indeed, it grew fat under the treatment, until it could receive by subcutaneous injection enough poison to kill fifty creatures its size.

The next step showed that the blood serum from animals thus treated was able, in varying conditions of administrations, perfectly to prevent lethal doses of the venom of the most poisonous serpents from producing death in non-protected animals. The new remedy is named antivenine, and its discovery may be regarded as one of the most important of the century.—Chamber's Journal.

Humors of Congress.

During an exciting debate in the house of representatives the members sometimes not only indulge in mixed metaphors, but rival Sir Boyle Roche, the member of the Irish parliament most famous for his "bulls."

A member, in referring to one of his colleagues, said:

"The gentleman, like a mousing owl, is always putting in his oar where it is not wanted."

In another speech occurred this expression:

"The iron heel of stern necessity darkens every hearthstone."

And another member, in a very forcible and dramatic manner, asked the house this startling question:

"Would you stamp out the last flickering embers of a life that is fast ebbing away?"—Youth's Companion.

Bicycle Casualties.

There are collisions with carts and carriages, and also between wheelmen themselves. Then there are bicycle runaways, and how strange it seems that a man should run away with himself, but when one loses control of his wheel on a steep down grade it certainly becomes as dangerous as any other runaway. A very curious instance of the bicycle risk is found in the action brought by a young woman against her teacher. She was a pupil in a bicycle school and while taking lessons fell and broke her leg for which she demands $5000 damages alleging that it was due to her teacher's carelessness.—New York Letter.

DANGER IN THE USE OF SLANG.

Experience in Brooklyn Shows Peril in the Word "Rats."

A new illustration of the dangerous confusion that often is created by the prevalence of slang is furnished by the following incident:

A professional rat-catcher went to a fashionable club on Tuesday evening and at midnight he had bagged fifty rats. With the living fifty rats in a bag—for this professional scorns to kill any rats on the premises—he left the fashionable club and started home. Then appeared an unknown policeman, who said:

"Where are you going!"

"None of your business," answered the rat-catcher.

"So that's your swag," said the policeman, sarcastically tapping the bag with his club.

"Nary swag," said the rat-catcher.

"What have you in the bag, then?"

Here we come to the first crisis of the story, for the reply was "Rats." The policeman then punched the professional for what he, perhaps reasonably regarded as his impertinence. Moreover, he grabbed the bag and thrust in his inquiring official hand. Here comes the second crisis of the story, for at least seven rats grabbed that hand. The policeman yelled and shook off the rats and the other forty-three leaping from the bag the street was soon full of rats. The poor policeman, with rats to the right of him and rats to the left of him and rats in an indefinite vista before and behind him, fled into the night.

This is not the first time that slang has indirectly created confusion in the world. The rat-catcher had no suspicion that the policeman would take his explanation amiss. This is the trouble. The slang that creates disaster is generally used unwittingly. May the present picturesque warning be heeded.—Brooklyn Times.

Action of Rain.

The rain falling on the rocks sinks into every crack and crevice, carrying with it into these fissures surface material which has been degraded by the weather, and thus affording a matrix sufficient to start the growth of vegetation, and afterwards to maintain the plants. The fibers and roots of these plants bushes and trees thus brought into life, growing and expanding, act as wedges to split up the surface of the rock and to commence the process of wearing away. From this quality of destruction a large class of plants derive the name of Saxifrages, or rock breakers, from their roots penetrating into the minute fissures in search of water, and so assisting in the process of disintegration. In winter the water collected in the hollows and crevices become frozen, and expanding as it changes into ice, acts like a charge of blasting material in breaking up the rock. The pieces thus detached become further disintegrated by frost and weather, and being rolled over and over, and rubbed against each other as they are carried away down the mountain torrents, are ground gradually smaller and smaller till from fragments of rock they become bowlders, then pebbles, and finally sand. As the mountain stream merges into the river, the pebbles and coarse sand continue to be rolled along the bottom of the channel while the argillaceous particles and salts become mingled with the water, and flow on with it either in suspension or solution.

While this disintegrating process is going on inland, the rocks and cliffs on the coast exposed to the sea are suffering degradation by a similar process, and are also being sworn away by the incessant action of the waves of the ocean beating on them, and attacking them not only with the impact of the water, but also with the fragments broken off, which dashed against the face from which they have been eroded, are thus used as implements of destruction.—Longman's Magazine.

The cook should examine carefully the label of the baking powder and see that she is not imposed upon. If the grocer sends anything but the Royal, send it back, as one cook did five times until she got the Royal. The only safe way is for the cook to have the finest things to work with, and the Royal is not only the finest but the most economical to use because it goes so much further.

New Smuggling Receptacle.

For a long time the customs authorities of Belgium have known that large quantities of jewelry were systematically passed over the French border free of duty, but they were at a loss to discover how the smuggling was done. In the luggage van of the express which runs between Paris and Brussels in a case which holds the accumulators when the train is electrically lighted. A key of the case is held by the conductor of the express, a foreman porter and an excise official of the border station, but none of these ever appear to use it. The other day, as the train ran in Quevy, the border town, a customs inspector took it into his head, more from officiousness than suspicion, to open the chest. To his amazement the case was filled to the lid with watches, chains, rings, bracelets and all kinds of dutiable jewelry, to the value of over $1,500. There was an exciting scene. The train was delayed, and a council of customs officers was held, in spite of the protests of the passengers at the delay. It was decided, pending further inquiries, to detain the conductor and the foreman porter at Quevy and it was ultimately found that the latter had for a long period been carrying on a contraband traffic for a well-known Paris jeweler, who, it is said, has had to disgorge heavily both in jewelry and hard cash in consequence of the disclosure of his frauds.

Electric Meter Competition.

The Royal Scottish Society of Arts, of Edinburgh has offered for competition a Keith prize, of $250 for improvements in electric energy meters for domestic supply. Competitors must sent a description with working drawings, and a meter adjusted for a mean pressure of 115 volts, and for a maximum of 4000 watts. Preference will be given to meters suitable for alternate as well as continuous currents. Special importance will be attached to the minimum load at which the meter can register correctly, and to the energy absorbed by the meter when the consumer is using a light load or is taking no energy at all. The error should not exceed 2 per cent., at any load; error due to changes of temperature between 0 degree and 30 degrees Cent. should be specified. The competitors must send in their papers etc., not later than May 1, 1896. Their claims must be limited to recent improvements.

A Queer Fish.

Dr. D'Arsonval, in recent experiments on the electric ray, or torpedo fish, connected a 10 candle-power incandescent lamp with the electric organ of the fish, and on irritating the skin the lamp was lighted. He finds that in a fish of medium size, 12 to 15 inches in diameter, the current amounts to two to seven amperes, with an electro-motive force of eight to seventeen volts. The electric organ acts like a muscle, giving out electric instead of mechanical energy. The discharge is alternating, consisting of a series of partial, diminishing discharges that follow one another at intervals of one-hundredth of a second. The back of the torpedo acts as the positive pole and the belly the negative pole of the electric generator. The organ emits a sound during the discharge, and when the circuit is closed becomes heated.

Railroad Speed in England.

Railroad trains in Great Britain are now increasing their speed. Engineering of Aug. 23, says: "Yesterday morning the east coast train won the race from London to Aberdeen, covering the distance of 523 miles in 520 minutes. The west coast train ran its longer distance of 540 miles in 535 minutes, arriving fifteen minutes after its opponent. The east coast train arrived at York, 188 miles, in 182 minutes, and at Edinburgh, 392¼ miles, in 379 minutes, or at the rate of 62.14 miles an hour. It made the entire journey at the rate of 60.34 miles an hour. The west coast train reached Carlisle, 299¼ miles, in 293 minutes, and made the entire journey at the rate of 60.56 miles an hour. It is reported that both trains reached Kinnaber Junction simultaneously.

CAN CURE ASTHMA.

A Leading Physician at Last Discovers the Remedy.

The majority of sufferers from Asthma and kindred complaints, after trying Doctors and numberless Remedies advertised as positive cures, without avail, have come to the conclusion that there is no cure for this most distressing disease, and these same persons will be the more in doubt and skeptical when they learn through the columns of the press that Dr. Rudolph Schiffmann, the recognized authority, who has treated more cases of these diseases than any living Doctor, has achieved success by perfecting a remedy which not only gives relief in the worst cases, but has positively cured thousands of sufferers who were considered incurable. These were just as skeptical as some of our readers now are. Dr. Schiffmann's remedy no doubt possesses the merit which is claimed for it or he would not authorize this paper to announce that he is not only willing to give free to each person suffering from Asthma, Hay Fever, Phthisic, or Bronchitis one free liberal trial package of his cure, but urgently requests all sufferers to send him their name and address and receive a package, absolutely free of charge, knowing that in making the claim he does for his cure a strong doubt may arise in the minds of many and that a personal test, as he offers to all, will be more convincing and prove its merits than the publishing of thousands of testimonials from others who have been permanently cured by the use of his Asthma cure. "Dr. Schiffmann's Asthma Cure," as it is called, has been sold by all druggists ever since it was first introduced, although many persons may never have heard of it, and it is with a view to reaching these that he makes this offer. This is certainly a most generous and fair offer, and all who are suffering from any of the above complaints should write to him at once and avail themselves of the same, as positively no free samples can be obtained after Oct. 10. Address Dr. R. Schiffman, 325 Rosabel street, St. Paul, Minn.

CARE OF THE WOUNDED.

New System to be Put in Operation in the Navy.

An order will be issued in a day or two by the navy department laying down directions for the removal of those injured to the sick bay.

This important subject has been almost neglected by the authorities since the formation of the new navy, and each surgeon on board ship has been left to devise his own method of getting the wounded from the decks to the operating room and there is a deficient system on board each ship, the men constantly receiving instruction in new methods.

To obtain a uniform system for the removal of the wounded below decks the medical bureau of the navy department recently gave consideration to the subject and determined to place a new system in operation.

One of the main difficulties in the successful lowering of the wounded from the decks to the sick bay is the small batches in the new navy. Under the plan contemplated ordinary hammocks will be distributed around the spar and gun decks. Attendants will place each wounded man in a hammock and take two turns of the lashing under the armpits so as to prevent him from falling out. A long stretch bar will be attached to the hammock, and its occupants will be lowered feet first. Trials of this system have already been held on board the Chicago, and the results were satisfactory. Practice with the new system on board all United States men-of-war will begin when the order is promulgated.—New York Herald.

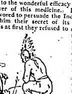
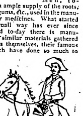
ITS HISTORY.

How Texas Charlie's Life Was Saved by the Indians.

THE ADVENTURES OF A UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT SCOUT. THE SAME REMEDY THAT EFFECTED HIS CURE NOW USED THROUGHOUT THE CIVILIZED WORLD.

SOME years ago Mr. Chas. Bigelow, now one of the proprietors of the famous Kickapoo Indian Remedies, was acting as a government scout in the Indian territory. He was known at that time as "Texas Charlie," and while on one of his expeditions was taken sick with a severe fever, and for a few days lay at death's door. During his sickness he was cared for by an Indian Chief and his family, in whose lodge he lay, so weak that he could hardly raise his eyelids. An Indian doctor visited him, and gave him that now most famous of Indian remedies, Indian Sagwa,—and by its use he was snatched from the jaws of death and restored to health, owing his life to the wonderful efficacy and curative power of this medicine. He then endeavored to persuade the Indians to give to him their secret of its ingredients. This at first they refused to do, but after much persuasion and many discussions they at last partially yielded to his request and the Chief of the Tribe sent East with Mr. Bigelow five of his most renowned medicine men, together with an ample supply of the roots, herbs, barks, gums, etc., used in the manufacture of their medicines. What started thus in a small way has ever since increased, and to-day there is manufactured from similar materials gathered by the Indians themselves, their famous remedies, which have done so much to alleviate suffering of every description. Throughout the civilized world there is no more potent remedy known for diseases resulting from a disordered condition of the kidneys, liver, stomach or blood than Kickapoo Indian Sagwa. This together with their Kickapoo Indian Worm Cure, Kickapoo Indian Salve and Kickapoo Indian Oil, makes a list of remedies that will accomplish a cure in all classes of sickness. These can be obtained at any druggists.





A Young Explorer.

Joseph Thomson, the famous explorer of Africa, who died the other day in London, was only thirty-seven years old. He was the son of William Thomson, of Gatelawbridge Quarries, Thornhill, Dumfriesshire, and was born at Penpont on Feb. 14, 1858. He obtained his early education, as so many eminent Scotchmen have done, in the parish school of his native place, from which he went to the University of Edinburgh. There a predilection for natural history which he had early displayed led him to enter the science classes, in several of which he gained honors, carrying off the gold medal in geology and zoology. He went to Africa for the first time in 1878. Among his best known books are "Through Masai Land" and "Life in the Atlas Mountains."—Chicago Chronicle.

RAILROAD RATES.

THE STEENERSON CASE FINALLY DECIDED.

Judg Kerr of St. Paul Finds in Favor of the Great Northern and Against the State Railroad Commission in This Celebrated Case.

St. Paul, Oct. 1.—Judge Kerr has filed his decision in the so-called "Steenerson rate case," reversing the action of the railroad and warehouse commission. The principal reason for the reversal is that the rate fixed by the commission is not reasonable.

The facts involved in this long pending case are reasonably familiar to the public. In brief they are that Elias Steenerson, a citizen of Polk county, began proceedings in 1894 before the railroad and warehouse commission, alleging that the freight charges of the Great Northern on grain from East Grand Forks, Fisher and Crookston, respectively, to Minneapolis and Duluth were excessive and unreasonable. The commission heard the case and fixed the rate which the road should charge for grain. The commission's rate applied to the entire state, based on a rate per hundred pounds per mile in sections of five miles. The rate fixed was: For 5 miles and under, 4 cents; for 5 miles and not exceeding 10 miles, 4.25 cents; over 10 miles and not exceeding 15 miles, 4.5 cents, and so on up to 400 miles. The railroad company appealed to the district court, and alleged that prior rates were reasonable; that the rate fixed by the commission was too low, and that the commission had exceeded its authority in establishing rates all over the state instead of between the specified stations mentioned in Mr. Steenerson's complaint.

Judge Kerr's findings of fact and his memorandum of opinion on the appeal comprises a document of forty-eight type-written pages, and is quite exhaustive. The principal points in his findings may be stated to be:

The Great Northern and Northern Pacific are competing and parallel lines between the stations named, and a law of commerce decrees that rates on such roads between terminal points must be substantially the same. The distance from Red river points to Minneapolis is substantially the same on both roads, but from Red river points to Duluth is about sixty-five miles less by the Northern Pacific. Therefore, on a mileage basis the Great Northern would be compelled to surrender the Duluth business to its rival, which requirement would be unreasonable under the circumstances, and, therefore, illegal. The court gives at length the history of the building of the Great Northern and its cost as testified to before him, and says that it is very difficult to determine the present value of the road and its equipment. It is important to settle this, because the law may not deprive the owner of property of a fair return of profit upon its value. He then attempts to arrive at an approximate value by determining the present cost of its reproduction. To reproduce the lines of the Manitoba, or Great Northern, in Minnesota, and its terminal facilities, the court fixes $44,000,000 as a reasonable estimate.

The court then details the items of the fixed charges and goes into difficult problems of apportioning to the Minnesota portion of the road the earnings of the road on its interstate traffic. After complicated mathematical computations the net earnings in Minnesota for 1894 is estimated at $852,416. The gross and net earnings of the entire road as computed; and Judge Kerr demonstrates that the rates fixed by the commission would result in depriving the railroad company of the income from its business to which it is entitled.

In concluding his findings Judge Kerr says: "The reduction of rates proposed by the commission, applied to the Northern Pacific company, would serve simply to aggravate the strained condition of its finances and sink it deeper into insolvency, but under the theory adopted by the court of a fair income upon actual value, the result as applied to the two companies would not be materially different, except as effected by the shorter haul on the Northern Pacific road to Duluth. If capitalized only to the extent of the cost of its reproduction in the State of Minnesota, the Northern Pacific could not, any more than the Great Northern, afford to haul grain between the points named at the rates fixed by the commission."

In a very lengthy but clear memorandum of opinion Judge Kerr says, speaking of determining reasonable rates: "It is difficult to conceive of a problem more intricate and involving more matters which must be taken into consideration before a satisfactory answer can be reached." * * *

The concluding chapter of the memorandum says: "At the close of a difficult task it has been my duty to perform I give expression to the feeling present with me throughout the trial that any decision which I may make is likely to be of little practical utility; it simply passes upon the validity of an order made a year ago. It does not prevent, and should not deter the commission from making at once another essentially similar order if present circumstances would justify it. The reasonableness of a rate changes with changed conditions and circumstances, that which would be fair and reasonable to-day six months or a year hence may be too high or too low, and so that which may have been an unreasonably low rate at the time of the commissioners' order may be reasonable now.

"The evidence in this case closed early in July. It was not, therefore, in evidence before me so as to be considered, but it is in the air that the yield of crops in the state is greatly in excess of former years. Volume of traffic is an important factor in determining rates; it may, therefore, be that conditions are so changed as to render doubtful the stability of this order as affecting the rate in question."

RECEIVERS NAMED.

Who Are to Take Charge of the Northern Pacific.

Milwaukee, Oct. 1.—Frank G. Bigelow of Milwaukee and Edwin W. McHenry of St. Paul were appointed by Judge Jenkins to succeed Henry C. Payne, Thomas F. Oakes and Henry C. Rouse as receivers of the Northern Pacific Railroad company. Mr. Bigelow is to be known as the financial receiver and will have charge of all matters pertaining to the finances of the property. Mr. McHenry, who for years past has been the chief engineer of the Northern Pacific, and who knows every inch of the road, is to have charge of its operation. The new receivers are ordered to file bonds in the sum of $500,000 each, within ten days, and to report to the court in the same manner as their predecessors. If at any time the appointment of a third receiver is necessary the appointment will be made.

In making the appointments, Judge Jenkins disregarded the wishes of the trustee and the different bondholders. He said that the history of receiverships demonstrated the inadvisability of appointing receivers who were connected with contending factions. Receivers were officers of the courts and not the agents of the parties interested in the property, and for this reason they should have but one single object—to subserve the interests of the property intrusted to them, and should hold no other allegiance than to the court.

W. D. Vandyke, who appeared for the second and third mortgage bondholders, opened with the suggestion that unless the court had already fixed upon the appointment, Thomas F. Lowry of Minneapolis be appointed. Mr. Lowry, he stated, was satisfactory to the parties he represented.

"It was yesterday suggested," began the court, "that only two receivers would be necessary to take charge of the property instead of three. The court is not sufficiently informed to be able to declare that the labors of the management of the vast property can be properly performed or should be imposed upon two persons, but being desirous of keeping the expenses down to a minimum, and the suggestion being uncontroverted by counsel, the court will venture the experiment and test the practicability of the scheme, and will appoint but two receivers. If at any time the welfare of the interests involved for any reason demand the appointment of a third receiver, the matter will be considered. I have given much thought to the suggestions of Mr. Lowry and of other names that have been suggested to me, and that have occurred to myself.

"The court thinks it pertinent to say by what considerations it should be guided in making the appointments of receivers. To a certain degree the practice of railroad receiverships has obtained for parties to agree on one or more names and suggest them to the court. The appointment usually follows as a matter of course, for if the parties concerned are contented the court may be well satisfied. Such receivers have severally represented conflicting interests, uniting for one purpose. As the fight waxes warmer between the factions the best of the conflict extends to the receivership, which in time becomes a war of factions among the officers of the court. That was recently exemplified in a receivership in the Northern Illinois circuit, when the receivers of the court, as the war became bitter, and as they became unable amicably to execute the trust, insulted the court by resigning on the condition of the appointment of other parties individually. I do not propose that this shall ever again happen in any suit with which I may have anything to do.

"Now comes the question in hand. The receivers to be appointed by this court must come within the definition of the law as I construe it. They must be men entirely indifferent to contending faction; they must have no connection with this fight; they must be men who are strict and impartial, and who will perform the duties in single devotion to the trust and with no ulterior motives to serve. They must be men of high character, capable of commanding the respect and confidence of the great public they are to serve. With respect to the name of Mr. Lowry: He is at present president of the Soo railroad, a line supposed to be operated by and in the interests of the Canadian Pacific, which is a competing line with the Northern Pacific. And although it has been suggested to me that Mr. Lowry, if appointed, would resign that position, the court is still very desirous that the men to be named should, if possible, be like Caesar's wife—above suspicion and free from any relations with anything antagonistic to the Northern Pacific."

When he concluded, Judge Jenkins instructed the attorneys to draw the order and he would sign it.

MILLERS' COMBINE.

SCHEME TO REGULATE THE OUTPUT OF FLOUR.

It Is Sought to Fix Rules Whereby Minimum Prices Will Be Set and Adhered to and the Market Saved From Overstocking.

Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 1.—The efforts being made by the leading millers of the country and the chief members of the national millers' association to bring about an arrangement which will provide a set of rules regulating the output of flour on the market and fixing a minimum price for flour appear to be on the point of reaching a successful issue. The details of the plan have been worked out and made known to the principal millers in the country, and the agreement of the large millers of winter and spring wheat to abide by the regulations, or in other words, to enter the combination, is all that is now lacking.

Aside from the Northwest Buffalo holds the key to the situation, and vigorous efforts have, it is said, been made to bring the Buffalo millers into the movement. The leading millers of this city have been interviewed and their statements will be published in tomorrow morning's papers. From these it would appear that millers of spring wheat have all along been very anxious for the consummation of the combination, but that the winter wheat millers have, until very recently, held aloof. To fully understand the movement it may be said that two months ago at a meeting of leaders of the national millers' association in Minneapolis, it was suggested that a plan be formulated whereby the brokers and other outsiders could not toy with the flour market as they saw fit and force the millers to dance to their music, but by which the millers themselves could control the market to an extent sufficient to protect themselves, if nothing more. The men at this meeting were principally spring wheat millers. The spring wheat millers produced about two-thirds of the flour of the country. Their action was rendered doubly necessary by the fact that the markets are at present flooded by an over-production of about 12,000,000 barrels of flour. After two weeks more deliberation a plan was worked out and submitted for judgment. This plan proposed to form a combination of millers and fix the minimum price at which the output of the mills will be sold. No miller may go under this price. All may sell above it. To solve the over-production problem it was decided to have all mills reduce their production 15 per cent, which would make a difference of almost 4,000,000 barrels in a year. If the market should pick up at any time the per cent of the reduction in production would be proportionately reduced. All mills failing to reduce their products when notified, shall, according to the agreement pay to the association or combine 10 cents for every barrel of flour in excess of the agreed rate of productions. The agreement is to hold for a year, and to be renewed thereafter yearly if satisfactory.

The opposition of the winter wheat millers to entering the combination lay in the fact that they would constitute a considerable minority, having only one-third representation. The orders reducing or increasing the output of flour from time to time would be issued by a committee of which the spring millers would have two-thirds voice. And in agreeing to abide by the decision and directions of that committee the winter wheat millers would be placing themselves at the mercy of the spring wheat millers, for during the season of the winter millers' busy days the spring millers could better afford, than at any other time to slow down. Matters thus looked blue for the plan until last week when an understanding gained solid ground that the winter millers would arrange an association of their own with precisely similar regulations to those proposed by the spring millers and would act honorably with the spring millers, although without any binding agreement tying themselves up. This cleared the atmosphere and now the plan is waiting only for all the spring millers and all the winter millers to get into their respective folds and arrange to act together harmoniously.

Prof. C. W. Drew, Chemist to the Minnesota State Food and Dairy Commission, says that the "Royal," being of greater strength than any other, and possessing better keeping qualities, it is the natural conclusion that it is the best baking powder made.

Elevator Burned.

West Superior, Wis., Oct. 1.—At 5:30 this morning fire was discovered in the cupola of the Daisy mill elevator, located in the center of the East end group of mills, and the elevator and contents proved a total loss. The structure was the finest mill elevator in the city, and had about 300,000 bushels capacity. It is owned by the E. P. Allis company of Milwaukee, and contained 175,000 bushels of wheat. The loss on this is $90,000, and the same on the building, or $180,000 in all; both fully covered by insurance. It will doubtless be rebuilt at once. The fire was caused by the explosion of wheat dust.

Again Mrs. Langtry.

London, Oct. 1.—It is rumored that Mrs. Langtry contemplates marriage with Sir Robert Peel, in the event of her securing a divorce in the courts of California. It is openly hinted in society papers that Sir Robert, whose visit to New York last year was the occasion of a great deal of gossip on both sides of the water, has little beyond his title, but Mrs. Langtry is still rich. Sir Robert is twenty-eight years of age, while Mrs. Langtry is in her forty-fourth year.

Burned to a Crisp.

Great Falls, Mont., Oct. 1.—The Eclipse stables burned at daylight to-day. Marshall Nevins, a hostler, sleeping in the building, was burned to a crisp. Twenty-two horses, a large amount of hay and a number of carriages were destroyed, as was the next building, owned by the Interstate Savings and Loan Association of Minneapolis. Total loss, $42,000; insurance, $4,400.

"HOLY CATHOLIC CHURCH."

Bishop Doane on the Proposed Change in Episcopal Church Title.

Albany, N. Y., Oct. 1.—The Rt. Rev. William Cresswell Doane, vice chancellor of the university of the state and presiding bishop of the diocese of Albany, was asked to-day to give his views to the Associated Press upon the alleged suggestions of Bishop Potter, of the New York diocese, to change the name of the Episcopal church to that of "The Holy Catholic church." He said:

"I am inclined to believe that Bishop Potter has been misquoted or misapprehended. He was, perhaps, not alluding to a change of the legal name of the church, or a usurpation of the term catholic, but to a title to be used within our church. I do not believe that there is within the Episcopal church any man or set of men who would be either so egotistical or arrogant as to suggest the usurpation by our particular religious body of the term 'The Holy Catholic church,' a term that belongs at once to the whole Christ believing world. My own idea is to retain without change the title Episcopal church for all legal forms and for use in the world at large. I would, however, make a change in the title page of our prayer book by broadening its scope. Instead of having it read as it now does, 'The Book of Common Prayer and administration of the sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies of the church; according to the use of the Episcopal Church in the United States of America,' I would have it read simply 'The book of common prayer and administration of the sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies of the church.' That would allow the use of our prayer book by any church, and would designate our belief that ours was the faith."

Her skull was crushed.

FIRE IN A TOBACCO WAREHOUSE IN CINCINNATI.

The Building, With Nearly Three Thousand Hogsheads of Tobacco, Is Destroyed, Causing a Loss of About Three Hundred Thousand Dollars.

Cincinnati, Sept. 29.—At 9 o'clock last night the Commerce street end of one of the storage houses of the Cincinnati Leaf Tobacco company, between Race and Vine streets, was found to be on fire. A ten-blow call brought thirteen engines to the spot. The building was brick, four stories high and seventy-five feet wide by 175 feet deep from Second to Commerce streets. Two thousand, seven hundred and seventy-five hogsheads of tobacco were stored in it by actual count. The average contents of a hogshead is 1,300 pounds. At a very low price the tobacco stored in this warehouse is worth $250,000. The building is very old and has been water-logged by numerous floods. Its value as a source of rental was about $50,000. Both building and tobacco are a total loss of not less than $300,000. The building belonged to the Mudge heirs. Insurance unknown.

HAVE PROBABLY BEEN ABDUCTED.

Two Girls at St. Joseph, Mo., Mysteriously Disappear.

St. Joe, Mo., Sept. 29.—St. Joe is mystified by the sudden disappearance of two young girls. The general belief is that they have been abducted. The latest disappearance of which the police have learned is that of Dora Kennedy, the fourteen-year-old daughter of a workman in the railroad shops. She has been absent from home since Wednesday, but the authorities were not informed until to-day. As in the case of Maud Steidel, who disappeared last Sunday, she has dropped out of sight as if swallowed by the earth. The friends of the families of the girls and their nearer relatives hold that only mad infatuation for the priest now charged with having induced Maud Steidel to leave her home could have been the cause of her disappearance, and that a similar feeling or a resort to some deception or force could have been responsible for the going of Dora Kennedy. The public is at a white heat with indignation. Dominick Wagner, the priest accused of abducting the girl, has asked police protection from threatened lynching. He still protests that he knows nothing of the girls' whereabouts.

The palace, with its 200 rooms, 2,700 acres of land and over 300 servants, never had a master rich enough to maintain it till the late duke married an American heiress. The much-talked-of wedding will probably take place in November, and will be the great event of the social season.

The Mussulmans Slay.

Varana, Sept. 29.—Advices from Antioch state that Ottoman officials there have succeeded in exciting Mussulmans with a report of an impending massacre by Armenians. As a result of this, Mussulmans, accompanied by police, raided an Armenian church and searched the building for arms. The Armenians resisted, and in the conflict which ensued ten of them were killed. A reign of terror prevails at Kemakh and Erzengen owing to oppressions by the Turks. Many Armenians have been arrested.

In spite of the low prices of live stock of all kinds there is to-day a wide spread and profound regret that there is not more of it in the Northwest. The very abundant and phenomenally cheap feed in the country is the inspiring cause of the regret' It is easy to see that even at the low prices stock, it well fed, will pay better for oats, corn, barley' potatoes or almost anything else the market will. The manurial value of the various feeds is beginning to be better understood and more highly prized' too and this intensifies the regret occasioned by too little stock. The lesson of the present should not be lost, and more stock should be the rule, regardless of its price'—Farm, Stock & Home.

Jones' opinion of the mill sites below the Kretchamer's dam; In giving testimony before Kenneth Murchison, special agent of the Indian Department to investigate the invalidity. Ray W. Jones said I think if a mill was located below the Meehan mill there would have to be considerable improvements made for business below the point, There are mills below the dam none that I would entertain for a moment. The cost of the improvements on a mill site below the dam would involve an expenditure that I would not undertake, Jones' opinion is sound. It would take to much money and to many lawsuits to locate a mill between this point and St. Hilaire has the best point on the Red Lake River.—Thief River Falls Press.

The best European authorities estimate that the world's production of wheat is between 25 and 30 million quarters—200 to 240 million bushels—less in 1895 than it was in 1894. While this is only a guess—as all such estimates must be, very largely—yet it is an intelligent one, based upon thorough and exhaustible research, involving a vast correspondence' and is reasonably correct. Since the yield indicated by this estimate gives the world a per capita stock of wheat below the normal, and about as low as there is any record of, it is simply nonsense to attribute present low price to "overproduction." The low price of wheat, as of that of nearly all other things not fixed by a trust, is due wholly to the appreciating value of gold—it simply takes so much more of the of the products of labor to buy a dollars worth of gold.—Farm Stock & Home.

Reading the reports of the Chicago and more eastern grain markets is calculated to make one feel that Minnesota and the Dakotas are the wheat growing regions on earth and they have wheat enough to not only supply but deluge the world, Higher prices in Liverpool, larger exports and smaller visible supply by over 30,000,000 bushels than a year ago, the certainty that the world's production for the year is not above normal' the small yields in all parts of the Union except the Northwest, none of these influence weigh a jot in comparison with the reported yields from the states, first named with the receipts at Minneapolis and Duluth, or with the assurance that the supply in this region is practically inexhaustable, It is true the receipts at the markets named are large enough to partly justify the influence they have on prices, but if something were said about the smaller receipts from other portions of the country the effect of the large receipts here would be neutralized, If the published reports in local papers in the Northwest about huge individual yields 30, 40, 50 bushels to the acre—were accompanied by reports of the 6, 8 and 10—bushels yields, infinite less damage would be done to the growers But everybody, even the farmers who have the exceptionally large yields seem almost insane on the subject of magnifying to the utmost extent the wheat yields of this region. If this insanity would assure a different phase if it could be exerted in behalf of higher instead of lower prices, it would certainly result in stopping the downward trend of prices, even if it did not advance them, All eyes are turned to the Northwest wheat fields, the hopes of the bears in the wheat pits rest upon the big receipts from this region, and it would be of great advantage to wheat growers if it could be made to appear, by reports and receipts, that the wheat crop is not as exhaustable as it is now believed to be.—Farm Stock and Home.

OUR COCOANUT TRADE.

How the Nut Was Introduced Into Florida—Its Value and Uses.

Quite a number of tropical nuts have recently been introduced into cultivation in this country. Already on the east coast of Florida are growing 250,000 cocoanut trees, 43,000 being on one plantation. It is believed that the first trees of this kind in the state sprouted from nuts brought from Central America and the West Indies by the gulf stream. At Key West and about some of the old forts cocoanuts were planted at an early day, as certain ancient trees now standing bear witness. In 1871 a bark freighted with cocoanuts was caught in a storm off the coast of Florida and beached near Lake Worth. Several thousand of the nuts were saved and planted, the satisfactory growth of the seedlings giving an impetus to cultivation.

The first importation of cocoanuts of named varieties was made in 1889, when the secretary of agriculture obtained through the state department two shipments of selected nuts from the Philippines. These, with two other shipments in 1890 from the same islands, comprehended fourteen varieties. To get so many varieties was no easy task, inasmuch as not more than two or three kinds grow in any one district or island of the archipelago, and they were collected by a skilled botanist, who made a tour for the purpose. The nuts thus received were forwarded to growers in Florida. Certain specimens from the islands of Albay and Misamis were of the smallest known variety, which yields little oil and is of inferior flavor. The shells are carved by the natives into beautiful drinking cups. The meat of a variety called "taygomanis" is prepared as a delicious sweetmeat with yams and sirup. Another variety, on account of its extreme hardness, is known as "lingan," which means millstone.

The word cocoanut is derived from the Portuguese "coco," meaning monkey, because the base resembles a monkey's face. The tree was known to the people of Ceylon as early as 160 B. C., the oils being used by them for making cement. The cocoanut is one of the most useful of plants; root, trunk, leaf, sap and nut are made to yield tribute to man. The fiber of the husk furnishes excellent yarn, and is preferred to horsehair for stuffing beds, cushions, chairs and saddles. It is stronger and more elastic than hemp. The Polynesians twist small cords of this fiber, which serves in the construction of houses and canoes where Europeans would employ nails. The green nuts are grated for medicinal use. Grated cocoanut forms an ingredient of the East Indian condiment curry. In the Maldive islands labor is usually paid for in cocoanuts.

The chief manufactured product derived from the cocoanut is oil, valued at 7 cents a pound by the hogshead. Most of the cocoanut oil consumed in the United States is manufactured in this country from imported nuts. It is valuable in the making of candles and soaps. It also serves as a substitute for butter. It is used by natives of the Pacific islands for burning in lamps. The kernels of the nuts, broken and dried, are called "copra." One thousand cocoanuts yield 500 pounds of copra, from which are obtained 25 gallons of oil. A good tree yields 100 cocoanuts annually, worth 4 cents apiece. The worst foe of the planter is the black rat, which builds its nest in fruiting trees and destroys the nuts. To protect the trees against this enemy the trunks are incased in broad sheets of galvanized iron.—Washington Letter in Boston Transcript.

Keats' Rank as a Poet of Poets.

At his best Keats is probably the greatest poet, in perfection of expression, magic of style and ineffable distinction of thought, since Shakespeare. His verse has the classic quality, and he who had no Greek, in his "Odes to the Nightingale" and to "Autumn," is as Greek as Sophocles. We cannot trace the mode of his inspiration; we cannot derive it from Milton, Spenser or the Italians. Like the minstrel of Odysseus, he is "self taught," and as the muses, meeting Thamyris, "reft him of sight, but gave him song divine," so they gave to Keats brief life, but all their charm. He is not a poet of ideas, of "movements," of revolt, like Byron and Shelley, but a poet of life and of its mystery and beauty. In him, at his best, is nothing temporary or local, any more than in Sappho. Even more than Spenser, he is, or should be, the poet of poets. Had he lived, even he would not have excelled himself, nor can we even guess what he might have done had his life been prolonged to the years of Tennyson. He was not only poetical himself, but the cause of poetry in others, and it may be deemed that Shelley never exceeded the merits of his "Adonais." Leaving such verse, as he did, and mourned in such a requiem, Keats may be regarded as one of those who die young because they are dear to the gods.—London News.

THREE WAR STORIES.

A Surprised Private—One Bridge Cosby Couldn't Burn—Ready to Drink.

Jeff Sterrett was a Confederate soldier who served as a private, and who is one of the two or three privates who survived the war. He was somewhat sentimental and naturally fell in love with any good looking girl he might see. He fell in love with a young woman of Murfreesboro and slipped off to see her at every opportunity. One day his feelings so overwhelmed him that he suddenly found himself proposing marriage to her.

"No," she replied, her eyes filling, "I can never marry you."

Sterrett was surprised.

"Why not?" he asked.

"Oh, my heart is gone. It's in the grave. It was buried when they buried Captain —— five months ago."

That was too much for Sterrett. He at once became angry.

"Very well, miss," he said. "If you can love a dead captain better than a live private you can scratch for it."

General Cosby had a mania for burning down bridges. Whenever he heard there was a bridge in his neighborhood he promptly had it laid low. His continuous destruction of bridges several times got himself and his men in tight places, where a bridge would have come in mighty handy, and resulted in an uneasy feeling among his men.

He moved into Virginia in the neighborhood of the Natural bridge and one day gave his men permission to inspect the great natural wonder. Two cavalrymen, one of a poetic turn and the other of a worldly, practical turn, happened to go there together.

"Isn't this the most stupendous, magnificent, grand view you ever saw?" exclaimed the poetic man grandiloquently. "Gaze upon that landscape. See how beautiful are the works of nature." He continued in this strain several minutes and finally asked the other his opinion.

"I don't know much about its bein stupendous, nor any o' that sort o' thing, but I'm d——d glad that we've found one bridge that Cosby can't burn up."

In the regiment with General Duke was a soldier named Jack Skillman, who was a great hand at telling yarns. His yarns were about great acts which he said he did, but which he never performed, ignoring completely several astonishing deeds of bravery he really did, and which really were more remarkable than any alleged act he told about. The scene of one of his yarns was a strip along the bank of the Tennessee river lying between Chattanooga and Knoxville. At the point mentioned the river flowed in a deep canyon and appeared from above to be a thread winding about, hundreds of feet below. It was a dizzy height.

"I was a-goin 'long here one day all by mysel'," said he, "an when I came to this p'int I see a blamed Yankee all by hissel' a-comin toward me. I says to mysel', says I, 'It ain't no use o' our fightin here, where no one ain't lookin an where we'd likeas not fall down the cliff.'

"I tole the Yankee we needn't fight. 'Yes, we will,' says he. I said no. 'Our fightin wouldn't decide the war,' says I, 'an we mought as well be friends.' An I tole him to come along an have a drink.

"The blamed Yankee kept on tellin me we was a-goin to fight, an fore I knowed it he jumped on to me. Well, sah, how we did fight! We knocked each other down an wallowed an scratched an tore roun, an I see more stars than you can think of. Oh, we did fight!

"Pretty soon I saw we were a-goin over to the edge of the precipice. In another minute I see we was lost. Over we went a-whirlin an a-whizzin, a-fightin an a-scratchin. We bumped into the rocks as we went down an knocked lots of 'em loose. I thought we was never goin to reach bottom. After what seemed two hours we struck, kerplank! Whew! We was knocked apart by the lick, an I thought the Yankee would be dead. I raised up an looked. Just as I raised the Yankee raised too.

"'Reb,' says he, 'I believe I'll take that drink now.'"—Louisville Courier Journal.

Music and Fatigue.

Music relieves muscular fatigue in man, says Professor Tarchanoff of St. Petersburg, who has been experimenting on the subject from a purely physiological standpoint. It helps to drive out carbonic acid in dogs and increases their consumption of oxygen; it also makes them perspire. He thinks it may be regarded as a serious therapeutic agent.

Belladonna.

Belladonna is a preparation from the deadly nightshade, a plant familiar to most persons from being frequently seen as an ornamental shrub in the flower gardens. All parts of the plant are actively poisonous, and many fatalities have resulted from the leaves or berries being incautiously chewed or eaten by children and other persons.

They Are All Blondes.

Every man, woman and child who lives at Point San Pedro, in Marion county, Cal., is a bleached blonde. Even the chickens, dogs, horses, cats, pigs and geese are a bright yellow. The whole place looks as if it were suffering from an attack of jaundice. This peculiar condition of affairs is due to the chemicals used in the powder factory at that place. The company is engaged in the manufacture of a yellow smokeless powder that is different from anything in the explosive line ever put on the market before. A robust, ruddy cheeked young man will go to work in the factory and in a week he will look as if he had had the jaundice for months. The changed appearance is a shock to the friends of the workmen who are ignorant of the cause, and it is weeks before the natural color comes back to the face. In three days a white dog will be the color of an orange and in three months his color will fade to a light canary.—San Francisco Call.

Riding a Bicycle Asleep.

Lemuel Dook, son of the proprietor of the Eagle hotel at Flemington, N. J., rode his bicycle asleep. He is an expert bicycle rider, and last week on the night of the full moon he arose in his sleep and wheeled all the way to Bound Brook, where he arrived about 6:45 o'clock. As he wore a nightgown and nothing else his appearance as he passed down the main street created a sensation. Head Constable McSally woke him up in front of the station of the Central Railroad of New Jersey, and he was loaned a suit of clothes by Yardmaster Flagg. He was also given free transportation home on the railroad, a distance of about sixteen miles.—New York Mail and Express.

Pneumatic Fire Alarm Telegraph System.

A new mechanical and pneumatic fire alarm system has been put upon the market, which embodies a magneto-electric machine for the transmission of a telegraphic alarm to the fire department headquarters. In this system the raising of the temperature of the room above the normal is instantly indicated both within the house and at the fire station. The system consists essentially of three parts, viz., a thermostat, which acts under the influence of the heated air; an annunciator, which receives the alarm from the detector or thermostat, and indicates it by visual room or floor signal and the ringing of a bell, and a transmitter, which is also actuated by the thermostat, and transmits the alarm by wire to a predetermined station. All these are connected by closed pipes within the building. The annunciator has many duties to perform. In the first place, as soon as it receives the alarm from the thermostat, its clockwork releases a vibrating lever, which sounds a gong. It also controls a number of bellows connected to their respective pipes, which, when actuated by the impulse of air from the detector, drop a shutter and release the clockwork, thus indicating the location of the fire. In other words, the location of the fire is immediately made known to the occupant of every room in the building. The local alarm runs for about fifteen minutes. It is located, preferably, just inside the main entrance of the building. The transmitter, besides sending the alarm to the fire station, is connected with the central exchange of the local telephone company, so that if the residents of the house in which the fire breaks out happen to be out of town, they may, by previous arrangement, be promptly apprised of the fact by telephone.

The grocer sends the new brand of baking powder simply because it costs him so much less and he can make more profit by selling it than he can on the Royal. The Royal is made from the very finest materials and costs much more than any other brand, which accounts for its superiority, although it is sold to consumers at the same price.

Wooden Clothes.

The time was when reference to a "wooden overcoat" was understood as the equivalent of measuring a man for a coffin, but it would seem that suits of clothes made of wood may soon be an accomplished fact. In Leeds a species of cloth, and also of a sort of cotton, made wholly out of wood fiber, have been produced. Both these novel textile fabrics are the result of prolonged experiments with pine wood and spruce, which have been ingeniously torn to pieces in the first instance and then bleached. After chemical treatment in many ways the wood becomes a soft, white pulp, which is run through perforated plates the resulting threads being dried by steaming process. These threads can be woven and the material is susceptible of taking any sort of dye. This fabric can be made at an astonishingly cheap price, looks well, and has a certain amount of strength (experiments in this connection are now being carried out), and its appearance on the market, in the form of imitation cotton, may soon be expected.

A Scientific Flight of Kites.

Extensive studies of the upper atmosphere have been planned by Prof. A. McAdie, of the Weather Bureau, by the means of flying kites. Ten kites, the two leaders measuring six feet high by seven wide and eight others following five feet high by six feet wide, will be flown, if possible, to the height of two miles. It is hoped by the means of these experiments and others which will follow them to make possible the drawing of a map of the atmosphere in which temperature and barometric curves, electric currents, etc., will be located for various parts of the country and for different seasons of the year. The kites will be kept in the air twelve hours, if possible. In order that acurate temperature curves may be taken, a registering thermameter will be attached near the top of the line. A surveyor's transit will be used to calculate the height to which the kites ascend, the difference being worked out by triangulation.

Cannot Be Punctured.

A Boston mechanical engineer is said to have invented a tire which cannot be punctured by ordinary means. The merit of the invention lies in a woven tube or jacket, and, according to the accounts of a recent test, a journey over a road strewn with tacks would not seriously injure it. The tire is covered with a light coating of rubber, to give it a smooth surface and make it water-proof. At the public demonstration of the capabilities of the tire a bed of broken glass and sharp-edged stones was prepared in a large loft and supplemented by a piece of canvas six feet in length in which nails and tacks were inserted points upward. The canvas was nailed to the floor. Over all these obstacles the tires were used a dozen times without sustaining a puncture. The outer covering of the rubber was badly cut. The tire is to be soon placed on the market.

A Clever Teacher.

Consideration for others is not always rewarded in this world, howsoever it may be in the next. The Nashua, N. H., school board wished to get rid of a teacher for what was, to it, incompetence, but in order not to interfere with the teacher's prospects elsewhere the board committee agreed to elect her provided she would resign at once. She was elected, did resign, but before acceptance by the board she withdrew her resignation, and substituted a request to be relieved of certain work, which the board refused to grant, and thereby rather estopped itself from demanding her resignation. This young woman may not be a very good teacher, but she is a capital politician.—Boston Traveler.

This picture was made in Madrid and shows the little boys dressed up like Spanish bull fighters. In Spain a bull fighter is considered a very important person.

PLENTY OF HORSE DOCTORS.

Like Other Professions, That of Veterinary Surgery Is Overcrowded.

"'I don't care to study law; they're too many in the profession now,' you often hear folks say" remarked a lawyer to a Philadelphia Call reporter. "The same thing is said with reference to medicine and, in fact, all the professions. That the statement is not without foundation was shown the other day by an acident to the ground as a result of the oppressive heat. In less than five minutes there were eight or nine veterinary surgeons on the scene, each of them prescribing different remedies to resuscitate the stricken steed. A great crowd had gathered around and the excited driver—he evidently valued the horse very highly—remarked: 'Well, who would have believed that so many horse doctors could be summoned in so short a time? It has often ben stated that there are fewer practitioners in this profession than in any other, but the incident I refer to would seem to challenge the assertion.'"

Artificial Marble.

"Nine-tenths of the marble topped tables and so on—what I might call furniture marble—seen in this country are made of artifical marble," said a man in the trade.

Thousands of tons of this mock marble are made annually, and even men in the trade can scarcely tell the difference between the real and the false article, for the markings, or marblings go wholly through the block, and are not merely superficial. The basis of the whole is a combination of limestone and chalk, which, chemically treated, can be made of any shade desired. The artificial marble in the rough is placed in a water bath, and upon this is sprinkled a sort of varnish, consisting of sesquioxide of iron gum and turpentine, and all manner of marble designs are produced when the turpentine is broken up by the addition of water.

Any pattern of marbling can be produced to order. Once such pattern appears, the air is expelled from the block and the colors are fixed by the immersion of the stone in sulphate and warm water baths, and then another bath of sulphate and zinc so closes up the pores and hardens the stone that it acquires the density of the natural article, and can be cut and polished in the same manner.—Atlanta Constitution.

The Foot-Ball Menu.

There was a time when a foot-ball player was supposed to make a martyr of himself, as far as the good things of the kitchen were concerned. His bill of fare was made up chiefly of raw beef, and he was permitted to drink only so many glasses of water a day. This barbarous custom, however has now been done away with, and from personal experiences I can vouch for the delicious fare of the training table of the present day. A foot-ball player's diet must be restricted, of course, but there is an ample list left that he may choose from. Roast beef, beefsteak, lamb chops, roast lamb, broiled chicken, oatmeal, rice, mush and all kinds of cereal food potatoes cooked in any style except fried, vegetables, eggs, apple sauce, baked apples (never any raw apples), prunes, oranges, grapes figs dates and all fruit in season; rice and bread puddings, stale bread, and dry toast—all these can go on the bill of fare. The forbidden dishes are pie, cake, salad, pork, veal, rich dressing, anything fried, ice cream candy soda water and all kinds of drinks, alcoholic, malt, or soft. No tea, or coffee, no chocolate, and—but this should go without saying—no tobacco.—Harper's Round Table.

Etiquette for a Bride.

A bride does not necessarily take precedence in society, but it is generally given her by courtesy at the first dinner parties to which she is invited. She is sure to have a great deal of gaiety just at first, for the friends of both parties will get up various entertainments in her honor. A bride must not, however, accept an invitation from any one until they have called upon her first.

SWEET ELDER.

Beside the crumbling garden wall,
Beneath the towering maple trees,
Along the hedge where apples fall
And yellow bells invite the bees,
I cling and climb
In summer time,
And yield a store of rich perfume
For all who love sweet elder bloom.

I spring up where the cattle roam,
And make the desert places green,
Where corn and clover find a home
I fill the furrows in between.
My feet are strong
My runners long,
And though I seem a slender reed,
No aid nor comfort do I need.

I love the atmosphere of June,
The fields when they are fully dress'd,
The birds that sing the sweetest tune
Come unto me to find a nest;
And little girls
With flowing curls
Come hither in the heated hours
And play within my shady bowers.

When autumn comes with cooling winds,
And gives the hills a richer glow,
My day of recompense begins—
My arms with fruitage overflow;
And all the while
I fondly smile.
For he that taketh aught from me
Receives an offering rich and free.

And when I feel the winter snows
I will not hide myself and weep,
But I will fondly dream of those
Who something of my memory keep.
My heart will yearn
For the return
Of faces that I oft have seen
When skies were bright and fields were green.
—Peterson's Magazine.

WHITE MITTENS.

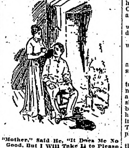
By John Albee.

New England country villages which look like hives of happy and peaceful bees are often nests of wasps. There is very little honey in them. There is on the other hand unexpected sweetness; there is often a natural refinement, more engaging than the manner of city solons. There are also humble romances, and, occasionally tragedies, acted out on a small stage, before an audience familiar with the actors and every incident, and savagely critical or intensely sympathetic, as the case may be.

I chanced to be present at one such entertainment, which lasted for a considerable time, but which I shall condensed into two or three scenes.

The curtain rises—and I see only two actors on the narrow stage which is set with rustic scenery. There are a road, trees, and in the distance water. This latter looks as if intended for the sea. There walk along the road toward the sea a young man, tall and stalwart, and a young woman, also tall and of a very slight figure. Her eyes and hair are dark and her features are somewhat sharp for a handsome face. Her name is Rebecca Champernown. She is the last descendant of a very ancient and famous family, whose pride is almost her only inheritance. No one could have believed that she would fall in love with a fisherman; least of all her mother. But so it has happened. She loves Reuben Gage, captain of the fishing schooner Anna Sheafe, and they walk together and meet as often as they can find opportunity.

As Reuben and Rebecca walk along the road they do not appear to talk much. She seems cold and distant, but in her heart is a fire of love that burns more fiercely the more she represses it. And she is obliged to repress it, for Reuben is shy, awkward and undemonstrative. Yet in some way, perhaps by her womanly intuitions, she has discovered his great, manly, affectionate nature. They have now been intimate a whole year, and every one supposes them lovers and probably engaged; but in fact they have never yet exchanged a word of love. Reuben has often been on the point of speaking, but the right words failed him and something arose in his throat that checked utterance. And Rebecca has waited, eager, a little impatient at times, and at others almost tempted to speak out herself. That, indeed, is just what is needed; she is conscious of it, and yet— "How can I?"—she asks herself. Then she goes home from her interviews with Reuben to her room and cries until her eyes are red and swollen, and her mother's reproaches follow, and make her life so wholly miserable that she wishes herself dead. She recovers herself in a day or two; looks forward with longing to their next meeting, which is always timed by his return from his fishing trip, and thinks matters between them will surely be settled. She longs for something to happen that will decide the question. But she is not going to give up Reuben; no, her heart is unalterably fixed, and if she dies an old maid her affection can never decline.



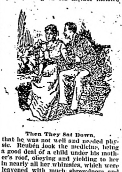
"Mother," Said He, "It Does Me No Good, But I Will Take It to Please You."

Reuben is equally perplexed in his simple mind; he is sure of only one thing, that is the state of his own feelings, but he is not yet able to decide whether Rebecca loves him. He would like a sign, something, however slight, that would show him where he stood. Men are always longing for this sign, some token, not words, but more certain, more significant, something to treasure and remember as long as they live.

Of late he has been unlucky on his fishing trips in the Anna Sheafe, a small vessel which he commands and of which he owns one quarter. After the vessel's expenses were paid there has been little to divide among the owners. The winter was coming on and with it the harzardous and often unprofitable business of trawling. He met Rebecca less often. Somehow without money in his pocket he could not enjoy so much being with her, felt less a man and an inequality he could not explain. Then it was, however, that he discovered the depth of his attachment. His companions noticed it and rallied him about it, and behind his back expressed themselves in the customary village slang and gossip.

"There's no more fish in the sea for Reub," they said. He is setting his line on dry land, over at the Champernowns,' pretty dry it is. Small catch there; a big name and not enough cash to go with it. He is too good for her, anyway; but I hope he will get her if he wants her and come out of his dumps."

Reuben did not recover his usual spirits; his good old mother insisted that he was not well and needed physic. Reuben took the medicine, being a good deal of a child under his mother's roof, obeying and yielding to her in nearly all her whimsies, which were leavened with much shrewdness and knowledge of human nature.



Then They Sat Down.

"Mother," said he, "it does me no good, but I will take it to please you."

"My son, you just wait; you've been behindhand some time, and it will take a while to get you beforehand again. These herbs never failed in sickness of one sort or another."

"Herbs, mother, are good in their place. I like the smell of them, but the taste—"

"That's just it, my son; the smell is sweet, and shows the taste is good medicine. It's just like being in love and marriage; one you like and the other you must take, because it is best for everybody and naturally follows; and sometimes," she added, with a sly look at Reuben, "it cures love."

"I'm not going to marry—never; so you are out of your reckoning there, mother."

"Well, I don't know. Your father before you said that; so did I—until I was asked. Nobody means what they say when in love; or, rather they mean just the other way. I think now I know what is the trouble with you, Reuben," and she poured out the dose and gave it to him, saying: "It will keep up your spirits, at any rate, until Rebecca gives you some soothing syrup—eh, my boy? So cheer up."

Reuben grew thin and nervous in spite of the medicine; but he went about preparations for the winter cruising. Bad luck continued to follow him; small fares and falling prices discouraged him more and more. But the greater his depression the more his mind dwelt upon Rebecca. In some curious, involved way he had come to connect his ill luck with her. His brother fishermen, however, believed it was all on account of his not wearing white mittens when he set and handled his trawl lines; it being in that region of fishing villages the universal belief of superstition that white mittens must be worn to insure good luck in winter trawling. But Reuben paid no attention to what he thought was a mere fancy. He felt rather that he was working with a half-hearted energy, and all on account of his dubious relation with Rebecca. He determined to see her again and arrange to see her when her mother was absent.

"I have come to see you once more," he said on meeting her; "but perhaps I had better not come again."

"Why," said Rebecca, "are you not always welcome, Capt. Gage?"

"Yes; we never quarrel—and we never get any further along from one time to another."

This was more than he had ever been able to say before in regard to their personal relation, and he was frightened at himself. So he began again from what he thought was another point; yet, as out of the fulness of the heart the mouth speaketh, he could not help betraying his true feelings.

"I'm not getting on very well now: no luck, no money and the Anna Sheafe getting in debt. I thought I would tell you, though I do not know as you care."

"Yes, I do care—very much, Capt. Gage. I knew something was the the matter, and I heard from one of the village gossips it was because you neglected or sneered at the custom of wearing white mittens as the other fishermen do when setting their trawls. Do you think it is a silly superstition?"

"Yes, I do, in the main."

"So do I, when I reason. At other times I half believe in it. There is something at the bottom of all common customs and beliefs, which, when harmless, it is just as well to accept. Our little village would be very dull and uninteresting without them."

"I have no particular objection to white mittens," Reuben said, "only I did not happen to have any."

"I thought as much. You would wear them if you had them?"

"Why, yes, I should."

Rebecca disappeared for a moment, and returned holding out a pair of snow-white mittens.

"There; I made them for you. I had to guess at the size; most girls would, nor, who have brothers," she said archly. "Let me try them on," and she pulled one over Reuben's hand; but before she could adjust the other his hands in some manner had become inextricably entwined about her waist. Then they sat down together and completed the trying on again and again.

They fitted; but Reuben never wore them afterward. He hung them up as a sacred trophy over the little mirror in the cabin of his vessel. And he had thereafter good luck enough.—New York Advertiser.

He Knew His Lung.

An eminent Scotch surgeon and professor in the University of Edinburgh was entirely devoted to his profession. A quaint incident in his practice will show this. The poet Tennyson had at one time consulted him about some affection of the lungs. Years afterward he returned on the same errand. On being announced he was nettled to observe that Mr. Syme had neither any recollection of his face, nor, still more galling, acquaintance with his name. Tennyson thereupon mentioned the fact of his former visit. Still Syme failed to remember him. But when the professor put his ear to the poet's chest and heard the peculiar sound which the old ailment had made chronic he at once exclaimed: "Ah, I remember you now! I know you by your lung." Can you imagine a greater humiliation for the poet than to be known, not by his lyre, but by his lung?—Montreal Star.

TROLLEY CARS AND PILLS.
From the Evening News, Newark, N. J.
Mrs. Anna Burns, of 538 Plane Street, Newark, N. J., is a decidedly pretty brunette, twenty-six years old, tall, and a pleasant conversationalist. On the ground floor of her residence she conducts a well-ordered candy store. When our reporter visited her store, she in response to a question told him a very interesting story.
"Until about two months ago" she began, "I enjoyed the very best of health and could work night and day if necessary. Suddenly, and without any apparent cause, I began to suffer from intense pains in my head, in my limbs and temples. Almost distracted with this seemingly never ending pain, I tried cure after cure, prescription after prescription and almost a gallon of medicine of all kinds. Nothing did me any good. In fact I became worse. The knuckles of my hands soon became cramped and the pain in my hips became more and more distressing each day. Business in the store had to be attended to, however, and so I was obliged, suffering as I was, to keep more or less on my feet and occasionally I was forced to go out. This was the ordeal I dreaded. Each time I went out I trembled when I came near the car tracks, for my pain at times was so severe that I was obliged to stand perfectly still no matter where I was. On one occasion I was seized this way while I was crossing the tracks on Market Street and there I stood perfectly rigid, unable to move hand or foot while a trolley car came thundering along. Fortunately it was stopped before it struck me but the dread of it all lasted as long as my pain, for I never knew when, crossing the tracks, whether I would not drop to the ground in my agony and be crushed to death. My anxiety to get well grew apace and I had about given up in despair when I saw in the 'Evening News' one day, an advertisement of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Here was something I hadn't tried before and I lost no time in getting to the nearest drug store. There I paid fifty cents for a box of these truly wonderful, health restoring pills. Before I had finished taking half of the pills I began to feel relieved; the pains in my hips gradually disappeared and for the first time in many days I felt as if there was some hope. I continued to take the pills and the more I took, the better I felt. I finished one box, got another and now, having taken only a few of the second fifty cents worth, I am free from all pain and as happy as the day is long. Since I began to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I have gained thirty pounds and now when I cross the car tracks I don't care if there is a dozen vehicles nearby. It is a great relief, I assure you, and suffering humanity has a never failing friend in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I know what I am talking about. I speak from experience".
Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Med. Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

What the Thumb Indicates.

The thumb is now regarded by the thoughtful student of palmistry as the little bird that whispers secrets about character. The woman's thumb stands at right angles to her hands every time. If a man wants a submissive wife let him see to it that he weds a woman whose thumbs lie flat or droop a little. The weak man's thumb is weak and pendant; the strong man's thumb is strong and erect. This same little bird can be relied on to whisper into a maiden's ear secrets she will like to know about the man in whom she is interested. You can tell at a glance at a man's thumb whether he is an aimless thinker or a man who carries his ideas or some one else's into execution.—New York Evening World.

Kind Lady—Certainly, I'll do what I can. So your home is in Massachusetts, is it?

I see by a recent issue of the Philanthropical Magazine, mum, what I picked up, that th' prison bill o'-fare there consists of tomato soup, beef soup, clam chowder, baked fish, with sauce; mashed potatoes, corned beef, with apple sauce; roast beef and vegetables, baked beans, brown and white bread with butter, oatmeal and milk, gingercake, prunes, cheese, tea and coffee with cream an' sugar; fruit, and cocoa. Keep the Baby Fat.
"CAVE SPRING, GA., May 21, 1894.
"My baby was a living skeleton. The doctors said he was dying of Marasmus, Indigestion, etc. The various foods I tried seemed to keep him alive, but did not strengthen or fatten him. At thirteen months old he weighed exactly what he did at birth—seven pounds. I began using "SCOTT'S EMULSION," sometimes putting a few drops in his bottle, then again feeding it with a spoon; then again by the absorption method of rubbing it into his body. The effect was marvelous. Baby began to stouten and fatten, and became a beautiful dimpled boy, a wonder to all. SCOTT'S EMULSION supplied the one thing needful.

ARE NEAR HAVANA.

CUBAN INSURGENTS ARE TAKING THE AGGRESSIVE.

They are Recruiting Men Within Forty Miles of the Capital—The Insurgents Enter Santa Marie on a Foraging Expedition.

Tampa, Fla., Oct. 8.—Passengers arriving from Cuba last night report the landing on Thursday of an expedition in Bahia Honda, forty miles west of Havana, composed of 180 well armed men supposed to be commanded by Collazo or Carillo.

Martinez de Campos reached Havana Thursday morning from Santa Clara. That night at 8 o'clock the insurgents, under Gen. Sanchez, entered the city of Santa Clara, entering as far as Central Park, killing many Spanish soldiers, obtaining their arms, ammunitions and provisions and returning to the country. It was a most daring attack and caused great excitement. Campos, upon hearing of the bold stroke, left Thursday at midnight for Santa Clara without having given audience to any one. His sudden departure from Havana created consternation there.

Rail communication with Santa Clara is impossible. The insurgents have destroyed the track and the storm of Tuesday seriously damaged all the bridges leading to Havana. Over 15,000 bales of tobacco are stored in Remedios and Santa Clara, and the insurgents prohibit their removal. From El Pueblo Oyo Colorado thirty leading men joined the insurgents after being enlisted and equipped as Spanish volunteers. They are going out Tuesday under Alfredo Mola. From Alquiz Thursday night forty-five men joined the insurgents. This is forty miles from Havana.

In the city of Matanzas the houses of prominent citizens were searched for arms, unsuccessfully. Capt. Jos Lacrete has burned Encruida, which is near Sagua La Grande, and destroyed the railway station and tracks. The large plantation in Cienfuegos of Marquis Apistiguia, a Cuban who affiliated with the Spanish, was entirely burned by the insurgents Monday. He offered ammunition and money to save his property, but without avail. Gen. Mello, with a Spanish detachment, left Guento Principe on Sept. 19 for Santiago province. Nothing has been heard from him since, and fears that the whole detachment has been lost have been entertained. The storm and rains ruined newly planted tobacco. The authorities are taxing the merchants of Havana by subscriptions for large amounts to aid in the purchase of new war ships. The Spanish soldiers' rations for several days consists of a piece of dried beef and pilot bread.

Sydney, Neb., Oct. 8.—A letter has been received here by R. S. Oberfelder from Edward Watson, formerly a private in the Twenty-first United States infantry, and a very reliable man:

"In Camp (Santiago de Cuba), Sept. 16.—My Dear Sir: I got my commission at Tampa, Fla., on March 1, 1895, for a captaincy in the Cuban army at $100 per month, payable in gold (and I get it.) The conditions were that I was to take charge of an independent company and to have the pick of my own men. I went to New Orleans, and as luck would have it, got five ex-United States cavalrymen and a very smart German who graduated at Leipsic, Germany, in chemistry, and is an expert in making all kinds of explosives. We started from Tampa, Fla., on a small steamer on March 12, 1895, and landed without any trouble near Santiago de Cuba. The soldiers sent from Spain are a young lot of boys who are not acclimated, and are dying like sheep. On Aug. 26 we moved our headquarters thirty miles further north and the following day sent Lieut. Hamilton with a detachment of twenty men to scout the country. He reported 1,500 Spanish troops encamped at a small town twenty-six miles south of us, and they were holding a fair or festival, and were having horse races, bull fights, etc.

"We held a council of war and our chemist, Herr Donzelmann; suggested that we dress as farmers and ten of our men should go and blow the grand stand up with dynamite. They left camp at 5 a. m., and arrived at the camp at 12:30. The men mingled with the soldiers until 5 p. m., when they placed under the amphitheater twelve pounds of dynamite at four different locations and exploded it with electricity. Our men escaped, but the explosion killed two Spanish officers, 68 men and wounded 113."

The Royal Baking Powder is the purest and strongest baking powder made, and has received the highest award at all the great International and State fairs wherever exhibited in competition with others.

Heavy Losses.

Ipswich, S. D., Oct. 8. — Terrible prairie fires, started by burning fire guards, have been raging north of this place for three days, doing an immense amount of damage. Reports coming from the burned district are to the effect that scores of families have been left entirely homeless, and entire stock ranches have been burned. The most conservative estimate places the damage at not less than $100,000.

His Daughter Got Away.

Webster City, Iowa, Oct. 8.—Rev. G. P. Hathaway of Alden lost his daughter by attending the conference in this city. He had no sooner left home than she eloped with Clarence Christian. Telegrams were sent to all the neighboring towns to arrest and hold the couple, but they reached Fairplay, Minn., before overtaken, and were married.

Foam in Her Boilers.

New York, Oct. 8.—The steamer City of Paris, about thirty-six hours overdue, was docked to-day. The officials at quarantine made an exception in favor of the Paris, allowing her to pass in on account of her being belated. The delay was due to trouble, lately developed, of priming or foaming of the boilers.

Fire in Denver.

Denver, Oct. 8.—The four-story brick block, Nos. 1636 to 1644 Lawrence street burned to-day. Loss, $78,000.

DEFENSE IS WEAK.

The Outlook Continues Gloomy for Durrant.

San Francisco, Oct. 8.—The Examiner says: One of the greatest sensations in the Durrant case, and one which comes now as a climax with crushing weight upon the accused, has become the property of the prosecution. Theodore Durrant not only confessed to a classmate that he had no notes of Dr. Cheney's lecture, but he begged his friend to take his notes to his mother, Mrs. Durrant, that they might be copied.

"I have no notes of that lecture," the accused student said, "and I only need them to complete my alibi." When the student to whom Durrant made the confession takes the witness stand the crumbling fabric of the defense will fall. The student to whom Durrant made the fatal acknowledgement is his classmate and friend, Dr. Gilbert F. Graham. It was not Graham's purpose to tell what he knew for the sake of an old friendship, for the memory of his college days with Durrant, Graham held back part of his story.

He had informed the police that Durrant had asked him for his notes, but he did not wish to tell the prosecution the whole story and repeat Durrant's confession that he had no notes of that lecture. Like Charles A. Dukes; he did not wish to injure his classmate's case, but now he has destroyed its last support. He has given the prosecution what they sought so long in vain. He supplies through Durrant himself the proof that the accused student was not at the lecture delivered by Dr. W. F. Cheney on April 3. He explains why Durrant "quizzed" with E. F. Glazer on April 10. He reveals Durrant's purpose in asking C. A. Dukes to say that he saw him at the lecture.

He tells why an attorney for the defense copied Glazer's notes in full after they had been placed in custody of the property clerk of the police department. He uncovers the motive which inspired Durrant to plead with C. V. Cross, and asked him to remember that they talked on the steps of Cooper college until they were late for Dr. Cheney's lecture. Graham comes into the case as a witness of the greatest possible importance to destroy the only possible alibi which Durrant has attempted to prove.

For the sake of his friend Graham held back the most important part of his knowledge of the case, but now he tells all, just as it occurred. In addition to that he repeats a conversation which he had with Attorneys Dickinson and Duprey a few days ago. He has even informed them of the important confession which Durrant made to him. Durrant made his damaging request of Graham when the latter visited him in jail.

It does not appear that any baking powder, when presented in competition with the Royal, either at the Government tests or before World's Fair juries, has ever received favor or award over the Royal or made an equal showing in purity, strength or wholesomeness.

HE HAD HIS FUN.

A Thief Arrested After Squandering His Ill-Goten Gains.

Baltimore, Oct. 8.—John Don Farden, alias T. J. Franklin, was arrested in Baltimore to-day for stealing $16,000 from the office of the Adams Express company at Terre Haute, Ind. The arrest was brought about by Pinkerton Detective John R. Saville, who has been working on the case since the larceny occurred, Sept. 6. The detective says Farden was employed as cashier of the express company, and that on the date named he put a package containing $16,000 in his pocket and disappeared. He was traced to Washington and then to Baltimore. Detective Saville, with the assistance of Sergt. Kalbfleisch, found him in a boarding house on West Fayette street and arrested him. He admitted to Marshal Frey that he had taken the money and said he was willing to return. He stated he had spent every cent of his share in fast living. He was without a cent.

Britishers Are Bested.

New York, Oct. 8.—Once more the Englishmen had to yield to the better brawn and muscle of Americans at Manhattan Field. Two weeks ago the representatives of the London Athletic club, were whitewashed by the New York Athletic club in a programme which consisted of eleven events. Some of the men who contested in that Waterloo were on the field to-day. The experts expected that the Cambridge college men would win at least five of the events, but it was generally conceded that Yale had the better end in the international struggle. Capt. Horan and his men were in excellent condition, but the best they could do against the sons of Eli was to win the quarter, half and one-mile races.

Wife Murder and Suicide.

Minneapolis, Oct. 8.—Clarence Anderson, a musician living at 427 Seventh avenue south, attempted to kill his wife and himself shortly before midnight last night. Anderson plays the piano at some resorts about town, and for several days has been drinking heavily. When in this condition he was very quarrelsome and high tempered. Last night he came home and, entering the room where his wife was asleep, without any warning or provocation so far as is known, he opened fire on her with a revolver. The first shot took effect, and supposing he had killed her, he turned the weapon upon himself, firing three shots into his head. Mrs. Anderson will probably recover, but he will die.

Near Death's Door.

Washington, Oct. 8.—The condition of ex-Senator William Mahone of Virginia shows no particular change from that of yesterday. He is simply clinging to life by a slender thread which his physicians think may be severed at any time.

Disbarment Sought.

Butte, Mont., Oct. 8. — Proceedings were ordered in the district court by Judge William Hatton for the disbarment of Judge William Clancy, late Populist candidate for state's attorney and formerly a well known practicing attorney in St. Louis, and later in other Western towns. Clancy is accused of obtaining a decree of divorce for a woman on testimony alleged to have been taken before the case was at issue, and before the appointment of the referee, who was supposed to have taken the evidence.

INTO A BASEMENT.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT A RELIGIOUS CEREMONY IN OHIO.

During the Laying of a Corner Stone the Temporary Floor Collapses, Throwing About Two Thousand People Into the Basement Below.

Lorain, Ohio, Oct. 8.—While a great crowd of people was assembled to witness the laying of the corner stone of the new St. Mary's Catholic church a temporary floor on which many of the people were standing suddenly gave way, precipitating many men, women and children into the basement. One was killed outright, ten were fatally injured, and between thirty and forty others were hurt.

The services were just about to begin when the accident happened. Fully 3,000 persons were assembled on and around the platform, which had been constructed across the foundation of the edifice. The boards forming the temporary floor had been laid across the joists, which were supported in the middle by upright posts. These supports broke and the floor went down with a crash. Fully 300 persons were thrown into the pit formed by the sagging in the middle of the floor, for a moment everybody was paralyzed by the calamity, but soon there was a rush forward by those willing to lend assistance to the crushed and struggling people. This made matters worse, for fifty more persons were crowded forward into the hole upon those who went down with the floor. When the confusion had subsided somewhat many of those who were able to extricate themselves did so by walking and crawling over their less fortunate companions. The work of rescue was begun at once and all were finally taken from the pit. Following is a list of the killed and wounded.

Killed — Mary Weber, 3 years old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mat Weber of Sheffield.

Fatally Injured — Rosa McGee, 3 years old, skull fractured. Katie Griffin, 8; hurt internally. Mrs. Mary McGracith, left leg crushed and hurt internally. Mrs. John Eustin, aged woman, left leg crushed and chest injured. Mrs. Cornelius Sullivan, spine injured and left leg crushed. Mary Galber, chest crushed and hurt internally. Mrs. Michael Kelling, injured internally. Mrs. Kate Diedrick, both legs broken and hurt internally. John Field Camp, hurt internally. Mrs. Margaret Mackert, hurt internally.

Those badly injured, but who will recover, are Nellie Dollard, head cut; Nicholas Wagner, skull fractured; Leo Theobald, head cut; Col. W. I. Brown, leg and arm bruised; Mrs. John Fox, both legs broken; Mrs. William Du Burgett, hurt internally; Mrs. Mary Latimer, right leg crushed; Mrs. Jacob Keefer, hurt internally and leg badly crushed; John Martin, leg broken; John Eustin, back hurt; Mrs. M. Bruce, ankle broken; William Ryan, leg broken. Many others were severely bruised.

The old Catholic church and parochial school were at once turned into hospitals. A score of doctors were called and they were kept busy for hours caring for the injured, several of whom will die. The accident was due to defective timbers. The contractor was told yesterday that the platform was insecure, but he said it would hold all the people that could be crowded upon it. There were between 1,500 and 2,000 people on it when it gave way. Despite the accident the services were continued and the laying of the corner stone was completed.

Sunday in Minneapolis.

Minneapolis, Oct. 8.—Yesterday was a Sunday which the Episcopalians of Minneapolis and those visiting this city from other states will not forget in decades. Figuratively speaking, the city was full of churchmen of distinction and renown, and the opportunity of listening to famous preachers was such as the people of this city may not have again for years. It was practically an all-day service in most of the churches, for the early morning communion was followed by another celebration and sermon later in the forenoon, and giving the congregation hardly time to get dinner. The churches were filled again in the afternoon, when several prominent bishops spoke on interesting subjects, in at least one church two afternoon meetings being on the programme.

Is Decorated With Leg Irons.

St. Paul, Oct. 8.—George Trotter is a nice looking young man, and not devoid of the evidences of having been well equipped for the journey through life, but he will start on a trip to-night from which he doesn't expect much pleasure, for he is going back to Montana, and he labors under the handicap of being obliged to wear leg-irons during the trip—for he is said to be rather a slippery customer. He spent yesterday as the guest of Sheriff Chapel, and he is being taken through the country by a determined-looking young man, Sheriff S. A. Willis of Valley county, Mont. Trotter is accused of murder and horse stealing.

INSURGENTS DENOUNCED.

The Spanish Premier Says That They Are Incendiaries and Assassins.

Madrid, Oct. 8.—Canovas del Castillo, the Spanish premier, has issued a stern war manifesto, which is of ominous purport to the Cuban insurgents. Senor Canovas del Castillo denounces the insurgents as a band of incendiaries and assassins, and says that not a revolutionist shall be left on the island to create further disturbance. Premier Castillo was born in 1830 and first attracted particular attention in politics in 1851 as editor of the Patria, in which he defended Conservative ideas. He entered the cortes as deputy for Malaga in 1854, and has had a seat in that body ever since. In 1864 he was minister of finance in the colonies. This is the third time Castillo has been the Spanish premier.

WHERE'S THE WOMAN.

Wealthy Mine-Owner's Son and His Divorced Wife.

New York, Oct. 8—A writ was served on Lloyd Mifflin Scott, the son of a wealthy mine owner of Pennsylvania, which will compel him to produce in the supreme court, before Judge Barrett, the woman who was once his wife, and whom, it is claimed, he abducted while she was living in Boston last week. It is claimed by the attorney who obtained the writ that Scott, while traveling in Scotland in 1892 met and married a young German girl. There was opposition to the marriage by the parents of both Scott and the young woman, and it is said that a few months after the wedding Scott deserted his wife, returned to America and secured a divorce in Deadwood, S. D. The young woman followed her husband to this country, and through Lawyer Smythe commenced proceedings to have the divorce set aside, at the same time instituting a civil suit for $100,000 damages against the father of young Scott. On Oct. 2, it is alleged that Lloyd Scott heard that his former wife was in Boston, that he went there and abducted the woman. Since then she has not been seen by any of her friends. They have become alarmed, and so in order that the woman may be located the writ of habeas corpus was obtained.

ALL ARE NOW HAPPY.

BUT NOT TILL AFTER A TRYING EXPERIENCE.

A Raymond, Minn., Merchant Figures in a Remarkable Matrimonial Tournament in Chicago—His Fiance Elopes and Marries One She Loves Better.

Chicago, Oct. 6.—Eugene Hirschfield left his dry goods store in Raymond, Minn., in the care of clerks last week and came to Chicago to marry Esther Schwartz. But Esther ran away with an old lover, and Eugene, on the principle that second choice is first choice when first choice is impossible, married Johanna Hirschfield of Dixon and took her home to Minnesota.

Esther Schwartz had long loved Maurice Sternberg, but he was only a clerk and was poor. One day last week, however, he met Miss Schwartz, and the unsuspecting Mr. Hirschfield at Philip Blume's house, on West Twelfth street, and while helping her fold and address 250 invitations to the Hirschfield-Schwartz wedding quietly proposed and was accepted. The next day Maurice Sternberg and Esther Schwartz met down town, went to Milwaukee and were married.

When this became known it was too late to recall the invitations for the wedding set for last Sunday. Guests were already on the way from various points in the state. Then up spoke J. S. Edelstein of Belvidere, Hirschfield's cousin, and suggested that they have a wedding anyhow. Johanna Hirschfield of Dixon loved her cousin Eugene of Minnesota he knew, so on Sunday, the day he was to have married Esther Schwartz, he took Johanna to Milwaukee and made her his wife. That night most of the guests bidden to the interrupted Hirschfield-Schwartz nuptials assembled at Philip Blum's house and celebrated the Hirschfield-Hirschfield nuptials. Hirschfield spent $130 for champagne.

Monday night Maurice Sternberg and his wife returned and were remarried by Rabbi Brandy. At the same time Max Sternberg, Maurice's brother, and his wife, who were married by a justice ten years ago, were also remarried. Then Philip Blum threw open his house again for Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Sternberg. All the parties concerned have now forgotten their temporary heartaches and are happy.

ARMENIAN MASSACRES.

Report Showing They Have Been Tremendously Exaggerated.

London, Oct. 6.—A dispatch to the Pall Mall Gazette from Constantinople, published to-day, says that one of the foreign delegates of the international commission of inquiry says that its report will show that the total number of inhabitants of the Sassoun valley did not exceed 4,000, and that the number of Armenians killed in the capture of the villages of Semal, Shemak and Gheliguzan and in the taking of Antokhdagh Pass was at the most 300 to 500. It is also claimed that the report will demonstrate that there is no evidence that any one was killed in cold blood or that there were any mutilations of women or children. Finally, it is asserted by the delegate, according to the correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette, that about forty persons were buried in the death pit at Gheliguzan and that the statement that a number of women threw themselves over a cliff in order to avoid dishonor is also false.

Murdered Near Mora.

Mora, Minn., Oct. 6.—Albert Peterson was murdered at McClure's camp, eighteen miles from this place. An Indian who has been staying with Peterson, brought the news to another camp, eight miles distant, at 4 o'clock this morning. The Indian was bareheaded and barefooted and badly frightened. His story ran as follows: Two men were at the camp that day whom Peterson said were hunters. The Indian went to bed early and immediately afterward he heard a shot, and, jumping up, was met at the door by one of the hunters who fired a shot at him, but missed him. Peterson was shot through the back from through a window. Appearances indicate that he was in the act of mixing bread, as his hands were covered with dough. The hunters are missing.

Scandal and Damage Suit.

Chicago, Oct. 6.—The damage suit of ex-Congressman Ransom W. Dunham against Maj. Arthur W. Allyn for the alleged alienation of the affections of the plaintiff's wife, came to trial today. The divorce granted Dunham, who named Allyn as co-respondent, created a sensation at the time, owing to the social prominence of all parties. Maj. Allyn married Mrs. Dunham as soon as the divorce was granted, and Mr. Dunham's suit for damages followed. Mrs. Dunham was prominent in Philadelphia, where she lived previous to her marriage to the ex-congressman.

Hill City, S. D., Oct. 6.—The thirty-foot shaft of the Hazel claim, four miles east of this town, to-day unearthed a nest of the richest specimens of gold ore ever found in the Black Hills. The ledge is of unknown dimensions in width, and it is reasonably certain that the mine surpasses the Holy Terror. There is much excitement.

Big Futurity Stake.

Chicago, Oct. 6.—The Harlem race track to-day transferred its futurity of 1897 to the St. Louis fair grounds. This stake is the largest ever closed in America, it having over 1,500 entries, comprising the cream of the brood mares of America. The stake should be worth $50,000 to the winner.

The single gold standard papers seem to have unbounded confidence in the ignorance and stupidity of the American people. They harp upon the bountiful crops and the business revival, and claim that these will be the death of what they are pleased to call the "silver craze.,, They will find that people are not so easily lulled into a false security. A very large proportion of the people of the United States believe in utilization of silver as a redemption money. They do not believe in making a Jacob of gold and an Esau of silver. They are in favor as using both as money. The silver question may for a time be put to sleep and dreams of that power which is striving to enslave not only this country but the whole world, by manipulating the money supply.—Midway News,

The Duluth News Tribune suggests the feasibility of pushing the opening of the Red Lake Reservation at Washington. The citizens of Red Lake Falls are inaugurating such a movement.

Petitions should be circulated and memorials drafted that would put the government at Washington on to the feelings of the people in this matter. If Northern Minnesota had expressed her resentment at the dilatory policy being pursued, a roar would go up that would command attention. Let us roar from St. Vincent to Wilmar and from Duluth to Moorhead, and let us all roar together.—Red Lake Falls Gazette,

The Northern Pacific is meeting with trouble in pushing its Keystone extension through. Some of the farmers through whose land the road is to pass, are endeavoring to realize more than the first price which they made the company and are showing fight, Thursday this assumed quite a serious phase when a Bohemian threatened to use force in his attempt to stop the workmen from entering his domain. The work was stopped for a time until the matter could be adjusted

It was taken into court and put in such shape that the men could continue work, and an extra force was added added to-day to make up for lost time,— Crookston Times.

Col. A, F, Naff, (the special agent of Uncle Sam, in the interior department who is stationed in Crookston at present is just back from a trip up to Red Lake country, It was Col. Naff's first introduction to the scene of so much that is interesting to the people of this section who have waited long in the hope that the country might become of some use and value to the people of the state.

The trip was made by water to the agency and thence by team along the south shore of the lake, and east to the agricultural district, The colonel was much impressed by what he saw

The wealth of pine in the district immediately surrounding the lake was particularly noted, and immense body of rich agricultural lands between Thief River Falls and the lake was a revelation to him. The hundreds of thousands of acres should by all means be redeemed by the hand of progress and be made to yield tribute and add wealth to the state while furnishing homes for thousands of her citizens. The object of Col. Naff's visit to ascertain the feeling of the indians and settlers concerning the future of the reservation and by personal contact to get their honest views. He found a strong sentiment prevailing which is favorable to a reduction of the limits of the reservation. The west end, containing a large proportion of the most valuable agricultural lands, he thinks the indian would be willing to cede to the government and these lands might be made at once avalable for settlement. The division line which seems to be satisfactory to all would be the range line between ranges 36 37. This would be a long stride in the direction for practical results and would open a vast territory which is altogether unfruitful and upon which even the hay is very valuable this year, the Indians will not allow to be cut. Another matter which impressed Col. Naff was the quantity of dead, burned and fallen pine which is wasted. There is a mine of wealth in this which is being wasted and doing no one any good, and is rapidly passing out of the condition when it will be of little value. Heretofore this has been saved in a measure by the Indians who have been granted permission to log it out and the proceeds have been added their fund. This should be done this year, and much material wealth be saved.— Crookston Times,

WHEN NANCY LED THE WAY.

She has tightened her cinch by another inch, she has shortened her stirrup strap,
And she's off with a whirl of horse and girl, and I'm a lucky chap!

With a "Catch if you can! I'm as good as a man!" at a breakneck pace we ride.
I have all but placed my arm round her waist, as we gallop side by side.

When "Roop! Ki Yi!" and, her elbows high, she spurts in the cowboy style;
With a jerk and a saw at her horse's jaw, she's ahead for another mile!

And it's Nancy's dust that breathe I must, and it's Nancy's trail I follow.
Till I leave the rut for a steep short cut, and I've caught her down in the hollow.

Then into the creek, with a splash and a shriek, to her saddle girth she dares.
"Oh, make for the shoal, or he'll stop and roll!" But it's little that Nancy cares.

And up the hill she's ahead of me still, and over the ridge we go!
And my straining nag has begun to lag, but it isn't my fault, I know.

Oh, fair astride does Nancy ride, and her spur she uses free!
And it's little she cares for the gown she wears, and it's little she cares for me!

But the strawberry roan, with the sharp backbone, that Nancy rode that day,
He doesn't forget that Saturday yet, when Nancy led the way.

The Fault of Geographies.

"I think the method of constructing our geographies is all wrong," said the man in the negligee shirt as he stopped a friend on the street.

"Why?" asked the other.

"They give a wrong impression to ignorant minds," replied the man with a negligee shirt. "North is always up in the geography, you know, and some people seem to have an idea that there is an up grade whenever they go in that direction."

"How do you figure that out?"

"I have discovered it by experience with local express companies. They charge me more for carrying a trunk north than they do south. I've had a little bit of a trunk carried twice from Woodlawn to Lake View and twice from Lake View to Woodlawn. Each trip from Woodlawn to Lake View cost me 75 cents, while each trip from Lake View to Woodlawn cost me 50. I tried to discover a reason for it and failed. Then I tried to explain to a man in the office of the company that it was no harder to carry the trunk one way than the other, but he wouldn't have it. He said it was 75 cents from Woodlawn to Lake View by the rules of the company, and that was all there was about it, but he couldn't satisfactorily explain why it should be any less the other way. Then I tried to puzzle it out again, and the only conclusion I have been able to come to is that they regard trips to the north as up hill work, and that's the fault of the geographies."—Chicago Times-Herald.

North German Superstitions.

During an eclipse all hidden treasures are open, and if you are wise enough to carry a primrose with you you will be able to help yourself to any of them. No witchcraft will ever harm you if you carry a water lily bud about your person, and if you should chance to dream of illness you will soon be happily married. If you eat double cherries, you will have twin children, and if you are afraid of lightning take heed to keep in your house a plant of orpine or livelong.

Sow peas on Wednesday and Saturday if you do not want them to be eaten by birds; put blue marjoram in the baby's cradle when empty to keep witches at a respectable distance, and if you don't want your last baking to go moldy you must take good heed not to bring cornflowers into the house. Stars are souls, and when one falls a baby is born. When a baby dies God makes a new star.—All the Year Round.

Curiosities In Cotton.

A hank or cut of cotton always consists of 840 yards. Messrs. Thomas Houldsworth & Co. of England produced by their machinery cotton yarn or cotton thread so fine that out of one pound weight of cotton were spun 10,000 hanks, or a thread of 4,770 miles in length. Of course the thread was too fine to be of any practical value. It demonstrated only the perfection of the machinery. No material admits of such fine spinning as does cotton. Messrs. Houldsworth spun out of one pound of sea island cotton a thread 1,000 miles in length that was quite strong enough for use. With linen yarn a hank or cut consists of 300 yards.

A scamp was originally only a traveler, but in the early middle ages most of the scampering was done for some good cause, and the man who scampered was, in virtue of that fact, adjudged to be a person of bad character.

NOT CRUSOE'S ISLAND.

A Mistake to Suppose That De Foe Had Fernandez In His Mind.

The San Francisco Bulletin contains a very readable article entitled "Island of Crusoe, the Scene of Daniel De Foe's Immortal Romance," etc., in which the writer raises and discusses the question whether it was on the island of Juan Fernandez or an island of Mocho that Alexander Selkirk spent his four years of solitude. But the chief interest in the article lies in the gross error of the writer in making one or other of these islands the scene of Robinson Crusoe's adventures. He mentions an Italian explorer, Pastone, as having visited these islands in 1844 and again in 1850 and states that he "found" on the former "a much higher order of intelligence than that spoken of in Crusoe's diary," and that "the visits of cannibals to the beach of Juan Fernandez are supposed to have been related by De Foe in 'Robinson Crusoe' simply to lend interest to his story," and, again, the writer states that "Selkirk landed on Juan Fernandez and there found a semifertile and anything but a tropical paradise such as De Foe portrayed in his remarkable record of human imagination."

If the writer, before committing himself to a statement so wide of the facts, had refreshed his memory by a rereading of "Crusoe," as presumably he pored over it in his schoolboy days, he would have escaped the mistake of locating the scene of the latter's adventures on Juan Fernandez, a dozen degrees south of the tropics and off the coast of Chile, but would have left it where De Foe fixed it—upon one of the numerous islands that dot the Caribbean sea off the mouth of the Orinoco river and the coast of Venezuela, and only a dozen degrees north of the equator, and hence under a tropical sun.

The article concludes with the statement that "the truth of the matter is that De Foe had but little to learn from Alexander Selkirk or of the island of Juan Fernandez that might have aided him in the foundation of the character of Crusoe."

That is possibly true, for it would seem that the simple fact of Selkirk's four years of isolation from mankind on that lonely island did but little more than suggest to the fertile imagination of De Foe the far more elaborate yet fictitious story of a man of larger views and observation than Selkirk, such as we have presented in the character and adventures of "Robinson Crusoe," who is made to spend not four years only, but a score of them, on an island not "semifertile," but crowned with tropical luxuriance such as might be supposed to characterize the islands of the Caribbean sea. And to impart additional zest to the story its hero, after some years of solitude, is favored with a "man Friday" for companionship and later on is placed at the head of a colony of rescued natives of neighboring islands and of his own shipwrecked countrymen.

De Foe, who gave to the public "The Life and Surprising Adventures of Robinson Crusoe" in the year 1719, just ten years from the time Selkirk landed in London from the long voyage whose chief incident has rendered his name and island famous, must have greedily drunk in the story of his adventures as he received it probably from his own lips, as he (De Foe) was a native of and resident in London, and if not from him at least from the published account of them as taken in an interview soon after his arrival by that famous writer of the times, Sir Richard Steele. This account of Steele's, giving as it does a detailed statement of every matter of interest relating to the life of Selkirk, his connection with the island that is associated with his name and of the island itself, may be found in one of the volumes of "Chambers' Miscellany."

Soon Managed It.

A Liverpool merchant recently went to his head clerk and said:

"John, I owe about £10,000, and all I possess is £4,000, which is locked up in the safe. I have been thinking that this is the right time to make an assignment, but what plausible pretext I can give my creditors I know not. You have plenty of brains. Think the matter over and let me know your decision in the morning."

The clerk promised to do so.

On entering the office next morning the merchant found the safe open, the money gone, and in its place a letter, which read as follows:

"I have taken the £4,000 and have gone to South America. It is the best excuse you can give your creditors."—Liverpool Mercury.

Superstitions of the Theater.

An Italian actor told me some of the superstitions of the Italian stage recently. Peacock feathers are unlucky, even if only painted on the theater's decorations, furniture, scenes, curtains, etc.

It is also unlucky to lay an umbrella on the prompter's table.

A yellow clarinet also brings ill luck on a new opera.

Never wear new shoes on the first night of a play, or if you do, put the right shoe on the left foot, and the left shoe on the right foot.

The most fortunate shoes to wear on the first night of any piece are the shoes that were worn when the actor or actress made his or her first success on the stage. These should always be kept as a talisman.

Adelina Patti has always believed in this and each time she appears in a new piece she always wears her "talisman shoes."—Footlights.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. TO A SUNBEAM.

(Lighting on my lady sleeping.)
So lightly touch her dreaming head,
Nor sunder eyelids sealed asleep,
But fleck with fire the shining sweep
Of hair about her pillow shed,
So lightly come and go.

And lose yourself, and find yourself
In tawny tangles of her hair;
Content you with the golden snare
Nor venture like a saucy elf
To stray beneath her chin.

On carven temples lightly lie,
Nor vex the amber, eye that's hid
'Neath either violet-veiled lid;
Ah! swoon across her cheek and die
Upon her fervent mouth.

For, having sipped the honey there,
You may not live another hour
To wanton with another flower
Nor burning rose—nor lily rare,
But perish in the kiss.

A RUNAWAY WHEEL.

"Fred, old man, you are indeed fortunate," said I as I leaned back in the easy chair before the grate fire in his cozy home.

"Yes, fortunate is very word," he answered, musingly. "The events of an hour changed the course of my life. If that hour had been left out of the day, I should not be the possessor of such a home, but would be back in the old bachelor quarters. They were not so bad, and there was only one woman for whom I would give them up. At that time she had refused me—was, in fact, engaged to another.

"I have never before spoken of this, but what I have gained has been well earned. I was favored by fortune in that hour, but it was seizing the opportunity that made me successful.

"A party of us had gone away on a wheeling trip. We were young gay and joyous, and the weeks slipped by until it came time for use to think of returning.

"From being in love with Emily Brant I became madly infatuated with her. Though she treated me in the most distant manner, I still thought, with the conceit of youth, that she cared a little for me. I was helped out in this idea by little incidents and trivial circumstances which led me to hope she would accept me.

"I had a rival—a man who did not seem to consider my actions of any importance. I could not seem to make him jealous in the slightest degree. He had naturally a very self composed manner, but this alone would not account for his bearing.

"I came to the conclusion that I must propose to Emily before we returned to the city, as I would have a much better opportunity of stating my case amid favorable surroundings than in the city with its bustle and interruptions.

"One afternoon we were riding through a beautiful valley, and it so happened Emily and myself were quite a distance to the rear of the party. The road was smooth, the trees arched overhead, the sunlight streamed in golden shafts through them, falling alternately upon Emily as she rode her wheel so easily and gracefully, lighting her beauty with a soft glow. I could keep silence no longer and riding close beside her, as we sped on together, I told her how much I loved her and asked her to be my wife.

"Then came the breaking of the dream I had had for so many weeks and months. In a few words, I learned there was no hope for me; that, though she admired and respected me, she had never thought of me in any other way; that there was already an understanding between Mr. Fernow and herself, and that their engagement was soon to be announced.

"At first I could hardly believe my ears. We rode the rest of the way in silence. For me the glory of the day had departed. It was as if a haze, like the melancholy haze of an Indian summer, through which I should see all things for all time, had closed around me.

"If it had been possible, I should have left that night for the city, but circumstances compelled me to accompany the party on one last ride.

"I never saw a gayer set of people than we were when we started the next day. Some of them guyed me a little about my lack of gayety, but I answered that I was to leave the next day and felt sad in consequence.

"We were to ride down one valley then descend a mountain into another valley. I was the only one in the party who had been over the road, and it was so long ago I had partially forgotten it. When we began to descend the mountain I told them we had better walk, as the road was very steep. They took my advice for a time, and we had gone the greater part of the way, when one of the party, in a spirit of frolic, mounted his wheel and dared the others to do likewise.

"Thinking we were almost at the foot of the mountain, we all followed his example. I was riding in the lead, Earnest Fernow was close beside me. Suddenly, on turning a bend, we came upon a pitch in the road so steep as to greatly alarm us.

"We had all been riding a good speed. This in itself would have mattered little had each one of us had our wheels under perfect control; but timidity, carelessness or fright might mean great danger.

"I saw Earnest Fernow turn white and jam his brake down hard, while he back pedaled with all his might. Suddenly we were startled by a cry of fear—a cry for help. 'Earnest, save me!' The next instant Emily Brant sped by us. She had lost control of her wheel.

"Fernow paid no heed. He was too frightened himself. He turned his bicycle into the bank and jumped. Even at the speed which she was going I knew she realized he had deserted her.

"Unless you have been similarly placed you cannot understand the feeling of horror that comes over you as you know your wheel is beyond your control on a steep mountain. There is no way to stop but by turning into the bank and taking a headlong plunge, and the chances of injury or death, or to keep on, while the speed increased with each revolution of the wheels, and the chances of escape grow less.

"I realized that if I started in pursuit my wheel would be in a moment more beyond any control. Still, my opportunity had come, and I did not hesitate. A moment more and I was close behind her. I had no idea up to this time what I should do, but as my wheel, owing to superior weight, closed up the gap between us my thoughts began to take form.

"The road, fortunately, was almost straight. I remembered that where it came upon the valley there was a wide, shallow river. It came down the mountain at right angles to this river, and then turned to the left. There was a small open field between the road and river. I knew that instinctively she would try to turn away from the river. In that case she would be hurled against a mass of rock through which the road had been cut.

"I must reach her before we came upon the river. For a time our speed was terrific. The rocks and trees seemed to be strangely blurred as they sped by. We could feel the air, like a resisting wall, through which we were plunging. Then we came upon a rise in the road, almost a hill, which reduced our speed somewhat, and I came nearer her.

"As I came close behind her wheel she turned her head as if she could not bear the sight of the water toward which we were plunging.

"She saw me, and in all the horror that surrounded us, I felt a great happiness, for there was trust, confidence and admiration in that look. It said: 'You will save me.'

"Up to that time I believe she thought she was riding to death alone.

"Then I was close beside her, and as we came to the turn in the road, I reached over and seized for one instant the handle-bars of her wheel, keeping both wheels pointed for the open field and the river.

"There was a minute's jar as we crossed the field, then the river seemed to spring to meet us. There was a dull shock and a plunge into the water.

"I found myself, when I had recovered from the force of the blow, half standing, half floating in the shallow water, holding Emily Brant, who was white and unconscious. The landscape seemed to be spinning round like a top.

"I realized we had escaped serious injury, as the river had acted as a cushion and lessened the force of the impact as we plunged from our wheels. She soon revived, but was very weak and dizzy. That night the order of things was changed. I remained, and it was Fernow who left for the city.

"From that day the haze of Indian summer that threatened to envelop my life has given place to the glory of noontide."

For a moment or two, as Fred ceased speaking, we both sat looking at the grate fire, where the coals glowed in the ruddy flame.

I was thinking, knowing Fred as well as I did, that Emily might well consider that hour a fortunate one for it a great dread, but all I said was, "Thanks for the story, old man."—Henry E. Haydock in Once a Week.

ELECTRICITY AND THE MAIL.

Talk of a More Extensive Use of Wires in the Postal Service.

It has recently been pointed out that already the telephone is used, by actual count, ten times as much as the telegraph, the annual figures being put now at about 75,000,000 telegrams and 750,000,000 telephone talks. The long distance telephone system is paralleling the older telegraph lines all over the country, and in the cities the average of use of the telegraph, owing to rapid transit, messenger service special delivery letters, and, above all, the telephone, has dropped much below per head per year. A suggestion lately put forward by Mr. P. B. Delany, an inventor and electrician of high standing, is the subject just now of warm discussion in electrical circles. Having in mind the statistics quoted above, Mr. Delany announces his firm conviction that it is time to get out of the telegraph its full working value, and that it ought now to be used for the carriage of mails, not in the physical sense, but literally, all the same. He believes that 40,000 or 50,000 letters of about fifty words each between Chicago and New York could every day be profitably sent over a couple of copper wires at a rate of 12c or 15c apiece. Thousands of such letters now pay 12c in the mail to insure the saving of half an hour after a journey of twenty-four hours, whereas, by Mr. Delany's plan, correspondence between two such metropolitan centers could be easily be interchanged in an hour, and the documents be delivered in clean typewriter print. The plan is based necessarily an "machine telegraphy," which has been on trial before, and not gone very far; but the growth of the great cities and the undoubted desire for swifter, cheaper inter-communication of private and public news, give more plausibility to Mr. Denlay's argument than they have had hitherto. His idea is to give the public a low-priced telegraphic mail on the same lines that Rowland Hill first started his universal postal service, and his contention is that the function of railways is to handle passengers and freight, but not anything so intangible as correspondence and news.—New York Post.

A Farmer's Find.

John Stauffer has made an important discovery of anthracite coal on his farm, back of Cherry Run, W. Va., twenty miles south of Hagerstown. With the aid of his son and one hired man he has mined during the past two or three months twenty tons of coal, and landed the same at the top of a 60-foot shaft by hand. The coal was carefully covered, and the mining went on in the strictest secrecy by the light of an ordinary coal oil lamp. Stauffer has now started from the bottom of the shaft to tunnel into the mountain. The vein is very thick, and the coal has been pronounced equal to the Shamokin Valley product. Stauffer's tract embraces 1,000 acres, but the land is poor and his means are limited. Some time ago options were secured on neighboring lands, but prospecting met with no results. Before Stauffer had investigated the extent of the vein he is now working he tried to enlist the aid of local capitalists in the formation of a company, but was not successful. After this he started right in to work, keeping his movements secret and making surprising discoveries.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

A Blunt Man.

An intensely reserved man, Ibsen is not at all fond of talking of himself or of his works. At a dinner some time ago the wife of a well known artist, being seated beside him, insisted on conducting the conversation to that end and finally maintained at length that his "Hedda Gabler" was an impossible woman. "But, madam," he answered, "I drew her from the life." "Yes, Herr Doktor, but I am a woman. I should know. I say again that it is impossible that such a woman should exist." This was too much for Herr Doktor, and like a flash he turned on her. "Idiot!" he ejaculated, which was naturally the end of that conversation.

King Leopold of Belgium, who has long been ostentatiously interested in projects for the civilization of Africa, seems willing to let Europe "go by the board." The sale of seacoast at Ostend, which the thrifty Leopold has sold for £1,500,000 to Col. North, the Nitrate King, was purchased with this avowed object of founding an international gambling hell.

American Machinery in Japan.

Advices from Japan, in treating of the omnipresence of electrical devices in that country, make special note of the extent to which American machinery is in favor. At the electric generating station of the Lake Biwa-Kioto canal twenty 120 horse-power Pelton water wheels are installed. These wheels are belted with Edison, Thompson-Houston and Brush dynamos, with countershafts between them. Lately a three-phase dynamo of Siemens & Halske has been added. The work of this plant is extremely interesting, and the installation shows how keenly alive the Japanese are to the possibilities of electricity. The canal, which provides the water power for the generating station, is crossed by several bridges. Near the water power station is an incline, along which boats with cargo are moved up and down on wheeled cradles. The cradles are hauled by steel ropes passing around a drum, which is worked by electricity from the power house. This peculiar adaptation is made necessary by the descent of the canal at this point, 118 feet in 1,815 feet, to the level of the city. The gradient of the canal incline is 1 in 15. Double lines of railways, consisting of flat-bottomed steel rails, are laid on wooden sleepers. The gauge is 8 feet 3 inches. Two cradles, each with eight wheels, are so arranged that one goes up while another is descending. The width of the boat is 7 feet and the length 45 feet. The weight of the cargo is from 10 to 15 tons, and the time of the passage of the cradle is about 12 minutes. Not only are the cradles moved up and down the canal incline by the electric motor, but the electric power is used for spinning, weaving, in the manufacture of clocks and watches, needles, oil, lemonade, ice, soda water factories, rolling mills rice mills and for pumping water for the innumerable bath houses which are situated within a radius of two miles from the power station. Besides these the station supplies electricity in the daytime to the Kioto Electric Railway company and at night to the Kioto Electric Light company. The cost of the power ranges from $20 to $60 per horse-power per year for daily rates of twelve hours; for eighteen hours the increase is 30 per cent and for twenty-four hours it is 50 per cent. If any one has the idea that the Japanese are children in the field of industry he may safely be said to be in error.

Scientific Wool Growing.

According to the story of a sheep raiser from Georgia, who has been telling all about his calling, the life of a sheep run in that state must be full of variety. He says the profits of sheep raising vary much more than they ought, and that they could be brought to a higher and more uniform average if systematic sheep husbandry were introduced. The range of profits runs from 10 per cent under no management at all to 25, 50 and sometimes 100 per cent on capital invested. The prime object in keeping sheep is wool, and old sheep, when fat off the native pastures—the woods—are sold for mutton. The breed is the native or piney woods, crossed slightly with the merino grade. They are worth from $1.25 to $2 a head. The wool is sold to the merchants in the nearest town. It is disposed of unwashed, and weighs from three to four pounds fleece, according to the season and pastures. The sheep are sheared in early summer. Lands sell at from $1 to $5 an acre. The native sheep is indigenous to the Georgia soil, and having such a hardy, self-reliant, self-supporting, valuable animal to rear, and at such a low cost for support, the wool growers of Southern Georgia are the most independent and prosperous sheep raisers in Christendom.

The easy, safe and certain protection of our bread, biscuit and cake from all danger of unwholesomeness is in the use of the Royal Baking Powder only. This powder is mentioned because of the innumerable reports in its favor by high medical authorities, by the U. S. Government, and by the official chemists and Boards of Health, which leave no doubt as to its entire freedom from alum, lime, and ammonia, its absolute purity and wholesomeness. While its use is thus a safeguard against the poisonous alum powders, it is satisfactory at the same time to know that owing to its greater strength it is more economical.

Electric Power in Steel Works.

A notable utilization of electric power is about to be made at Duquesne, Pa., where six blast furnaces will be erected for operation in conjunction with the extensive steel works located there. The furnaces will be the largest ever built, and the plant will be so equipped that most of the work will be done automatically by electric or steam power. As showing how entirely old methods are being superseded, there will not be a single belt in the whole power station, as the generators will be connected directly to the steam engines, and the arc machines will be similarly connected to the electric motors that will drive them. The electric power station is to generate about 3,000 horse-power for light and power. Among the many applications of electricity that will be seen in this essentially modern installation are thirty very powerful electric cranes, three or more electric traveling bridges over 250 feet span, the largest ever built for unloading ore, about fifteen electric motor cars, half a dozen electric conveyors, and a large number of stationary motors for driving miscellaneous apparatus. In the Homestead steel works electric motors are already running up to an aggregate of 4,000 horse-power, and in the Bessemer works to about 2,000 horse-power.

Cement for Cycle Tires.

Bisulphide of carbon, 100 parts; guttapercha, 20 parts; caoutchouc, 40 parts; isinglass, 10 parts. This cement is applied to the junction of the surfaces after they have been properly cleaned. If the rent is very big apply the cement in layers. Bind up the rubber tire tightly with thread, let dry for twenty-four to thirty six hours, cut off the thread and remove the protruding cement with a sharp knife, which must previously have been dipped in water.—Zeitschrift.

Welding Lead.

A method of welding lead has recently been devised in France by M. Blondel. The surfaces to be joined are carefully cleaned, and between them is placed a thin layer of lead amalgam. On passing an ordinary soldering iron along the line of junction, the mercury of the amalgam is vaporized, and the lead, set free in an exceedingly finely divided state, fuses and unites the two surfaces together.

A YEAR IN A WAGON.

The Home on Wheels of an Artist and His Wife.

H. J. Brewer, the well known artist, late of the California Magazine staff, and his wife have lived for over a year in a cottage on wheels. Their movable residence is at present in a lot in Alameda, where they are located under a spreading oak, and where they intend to stay during the coming winter.

Their house is a result of Mr. Brewer's attempt to secure a place where he could work at his art and still be at liberty to go where he wished. The house was built in 1894, at a cost of about $5,000, and Mr. Brewer said recently that he had already made enough by the saving in rent and expenses to pay for it. The van is somewhat similar to those in use by gypsies, but is fitted up in much more comfortable style. It has one room 10 feet long, 4½ feet wide and 6 feet 3 inches high, and in this space Mr. Brewer and his wife have lived, slept and eaten for the last year. At one end of the wagon, over the wheels, is a raised platform, and here is a pocket edition of a cooking stove, with a collection of shining pots and pans gathered around it. Under the seat of the wagon is Mrs. Brewer's cupboard, and her table consists of the top of the big trunk, which contains the wardrobe of the pair.

The sleeping apartments are, however, the greatest puzzle to the uninitiated. The beds consist of two big cushions laid out upon the floor of the wagon, and the bedding is stored in a box under the wagon, reached by a trap-door in its floor.

The little house has plenty of light, as it must have, for Mr. Brewer has it for his studio on occasions. The door is on the left side, between the wheels, and is made in two halves, so that either can be opened independently of the other. Beside the door there is a big plate-glass window and several smaller windows. The whole contrivance, including two persons, the little stove and the big trunk weighs less than 2400 pounds and can be taken anywhere by two horses. Mrs. Brewer is no less enthusiastic about her traveling home than her husband. All last winter they were domiciled in the hills above Berkeley and never felt better in their lives. Last August they started with their caravan from Alameda. They went over the hills to Contra Costa county and spent several months sketching in the valleys. They then went to Berkeley for the winter and in the spring moved their residence further up into the hills. This winter they expect to spend in Alameda and in the spring they will start out for a tour of the state.—San Francisco Chronicle.

To Make a Pot-au-Feu.

In various parts of France and in different households the pieces of meat that are used in the preparations of the pot-au-feu vary. Beef is the meat that is most commonly employed in preparing this dish.

For six persons use three pounds of beef, six quarts of water, two carrots, two small-sized white turnips, three or four leeks, one large onion, one blade of celery, one clove or garlic, one parsnip, three whole cloves, twelve pepper corns, two ounces of salt. Have the meat trussed firmly and put it into the pot with the cold water and salt. Place the pot where the contents will heat slowly. Skim carefully several times. When the liquid begins to boil set the pot back where the soup will bubble gently and uninterruptedly for four hours. Scrape and wash the vegetables. Cut each carrot lengthwise into eight pieces. Cut the turnip in the same manner. Cut the thread-like roots and the greenest part of the tops from the leeks; stick the cloves in the onion. Put all the vegetables and spice in a thin piece of netting. Tie loosely, and at the end of four hours add to the pot-au-feu and cook two hours longer. At serving time put small thin slices of stale bread in the tureen and pour two quarts of the bouillon over it. Serve at once. Put the meat on a dish and garnish it with the cooked vegetables. Serve one dish of any kind of vegetables you please with the meat.—Maria Parloa in Ladies' Home Journal.

A Sensitive Author.

When Dickens first met Hans Christian Andersen in a London drawing room he asked his fellow novelist to pay him a visit at Gadshill. The invitation was promptly accepted and the guest remained a long time. Upon many occasions during this very protracted visit Dickens found his patience put to the test by his new friend. In spite of Hans Christian's many merits and good qualities, his very marked peculiarities made him an exceedingly difficult person to entertain. He was exceedingly sentimental and emotional, and frequently, for no apparent reason, would burst into a flood of womanish tears and rush away to his own room. A few days after his arrival he rang the bell and asked to see the eldest son of the house. The eldest son was away, and when Dickens himself went to see what his guest desired he found that Andersen wished the eldest son to shave him, that being the custom of his native country. Dickens explained that in the first place young Charles was absent, and that, secondly, it would be an experiment fraught with danger for him to attempt the desired service, as, with the very best intentions, he would probably nearly decapitate his illustrious guest. Under these most untoward circumstances Hans Christian, weeping, betook himself to the nearest barber's shop and had his beard attended to professionally.—New York Herald.

Curiosities of the Custom House

Here is a singular thing: Henry Irving, an Englishman, comes here with a company of actors and brings over several hundred tons of scenery, costumes and properties for his American tour. He is only required to give a bond that all his matter will be returned to England within six months, and enters it free of duty. Francis Wilson, an American, does precisely the same thing, excepting that he can't promise to return it within that time, and he must pay $12,000 duty. But again, and more singular than ever, Irving, an Englishman who is admitted free to this country, has to pay 20 per cent duty to enter Canada, a country under the same rule as himself.—New York Sun.

UNWILLING TO BE POLLED.

A Jury That Felt Apprehensive of the Result of Its Verdict.

"Some years ago I was prosecuting attorney down in North Carolina," said Judge W. F. Lockett, of that state, at the Hotel Page. "A colored citizen of bad antecedents had been indicted by the grand jury and was on trial for the larceny of some hogs. There wasn't a doubt of his guilt, for he had been taken red-handed in possession of the stolen swine.

"The prisoner had no money to pay an attorney, so the court appointed a young lawyer, who, up to that time, had never had a case to defend the accused. The youngster wasn't lacking in shrewdness, so he called for a jury of colored men, as he had the right to do under the law. I then went forward, introduced conclusive testimony to establish the guilt of the prisoner, and sat down without making any speech, for it was too plain a case to call for an argument. But my legal opponent got up and made a fiery harangue. He wasn't an impressive looking man, nature having denied him all physical graces, and endowed him moreover with a pair of circular-shaped legs that caused all the small boys in the community to jeer aloud when he appeared on the streets. But he had talented lungs, and these he exercised with good effect for his client that day.

"The jury of his peers wasn't out over ten minutes when they came back with a verdict of 'not guilty.' Everybody was astonished, and the judge's face reddened with indignation. Then he let out and told the jurymen in plain English what he thought of a set of men who would render such a travesty on justice. In conclusion he said: 'I guess I will have this jury polled,' and was about to give an order to that effect when the foreman, a great, strapping fellow, a plantation hand, black as the ace of spades, rose evidently in great mental perturbation and said:

" 'No, Jedge, yer Honah, please don' poll us—poll dat little bow-legged lawyer over dere; he was the one what told us to find Bill Jones not guity.' "—Washington Post.

CHEAP EXCURSION SOUTH.

The Farm, Field and Fireside, Chicago, is doing a most excellent work in helping those who want to better their condition to secure homes in a more congenial climate, or where the opportunities for getting a start in life are better. Its colony plan is very popular, and enables home-seekers to secure a chunk of excellent land at almost half the usual price. For its Oct. 15 excursion to Green Cove Springs, Florida, the lowest rates ever given to that state have been secured. A splendid train will be run from Chicago with special cars from Omaha, Kansas City, St. Paul and Cleveland, and a steamer from New York. The train will be composed mainly of sleeping cars, which will be used for beds throughout the trip. Fifty-six thousand acres of the best land in the state has been secured, the greater part of which will be sold at $5.00 an acre. Any of our readers who want to join this excursion should write the Farm, Field and Fireside at once. They will also run a special excursion to California on the 14th of Nov.

The Study of Languages.

I will say here that in this summer school (at Chautauqua) is an illustration, well-nigh perfect, of what we always mean in these pages when we speak of the folly and fatuity of much of the instruction, so-called, which is given in the languages at schools or at colleges. It is now certain that in three months' solid study with a good teacher, giving six hours a day, a pupil can learn Greek enough to enter any of our universities. It is certain that a Polish girl, entering a North End school in Boston, in eight months' work under a thorough teacher, learns to speak English reasonably well, to write it reasonably well, to read it reasonably well. Such certainties having been established, there is a satisfaction in knowing that a person who wishes to acquire the Hebrew language, the Greek language, the Latin language, the German or the French language, may go to this summer college at Chautauqua, may give five or six weeks, or perhaps more, to the study of that language, and may go away able to teach himself afterwards, sure of his ground, as far as he has gone, and, as I have said above, better able to teach others.—Edward Everett Hale.

Those who can afford more than one china dinner set still show a preference for white and gold, if their fancy is for subdued elegance. If color is liked, apple green with gold is frequently selected, for the reason that it "lights up," as the dealers say, more brilliantly than most other colors and under artificial light is softer than by daylight. The best dinner sets of the kind have the body of a beautiful white with a creamy tint, surrounded by wide bands of color on which the gold designs are traced.

FLEW THE TRACK.

TERRIBLE RIDE IN A TROLLEY CAR NEAR PITTSBURG.

The Car Gets Away From the Motorman, Dashes Down a Steep Grade at Lightning Speed, and Jumps the Track at a Curve.

Pittsburg, Oct. 15.—By an accident on the Carnegie branch of the West End Traction road three persons were killed and twelve of thirteen people badly injured.

The killed are George Rothman, furniture dealer at Carnegie; Jacob Heisel, glass dealer, Carnegie; Mrs. Elizabeth Bishop, Pittsburg.

Injured—Michael Foley and wife, West End, Pittsburg, badly cut about head and body; both dangerously hurt. Prof. Alex Phillips, of Pittsburg academy, head and neck cut; serious. O. J. Baldwin, Youngsville, Pa., skull fractured. Miss Emma Laughlin, Pittsburg, scalp wound; both legs crushed. Mrs. Pearle Horne, Beaver Falls, scalp wound. Mrs. Leth and son, seriously; unknown boy, bruised; Robert Willey, leg crushed and head cut; George Waddles, leg crushed; Frank McGuire, badly bruised. The names of other injured are not known, as they left the scene without being recognized.

The accident happened to car No. 50 on the long hill coming to the west-end on its way to Pittsburg. Just as the car started down the heavy grade the brake broke and it was soon beyond the control of the motorman; the speed becoming terrific, and when a sharp curve over the foothill was reached the car made a wonderful leap, landing trucks uppermost in McCarthy's Run, six or eight feet below the track grade. The accident occurred at a lonely spot and it was quite a while before assistance reached the sufferers, who were wedged tightly in the wreck which was most complete. When the conductor saw the car was beyond control he lay down on the floor and advised others to follow his example. The killed were found under the roof of the car which had been smashed in upon them. The escape of any of those on the car was miraculous.

USED HIS NIGHTCAP

To Fan Out the Gas Instead of Blowing It Out.

Sioux City, Iowa, Oct. 15.—Ludwig Terrmann, a farmer near this place, repeated the time-honored experiment of blowing out the gas at Hotel Fowle this morning with a slight variation of his own invention. Terrmann, realizing that he knew little of city ways, decided to leave the gas burning rather than take any chances. The light bothered him so much, however, that he finally resolved to extinguish it. Having heard that it must not be blown out, he fanned it out instead, with his night cap. The transom was open and the rural gentleman escaped with his life, although he is still very ill from the effects of his experience.

At the pier a cab was in waiting, into which Mr. Cleveland jumped alone and was driven rapidly away. It could not be learned where he went. Later the cab carrying Mr. Cleveland returned. The president was immediately taken aboard the yacht and she steamed to the south. Inquiry at the principal hotels elicited no information as to where Mr. Cleveland went during his short stay in the city. The president had a healthy bronze color in his face and looked particularly well.

PROUD DAY FOR BISHOP WHIPPLE.

His Faribault Schools on Exhibition.

Faribault, Minn., Oct. 15.—The delegates of the general Episcopal convention, now being held in Minneapolis, came in a body on a special train to visit the beautiful city of Faribault and its many institutions of learning. The number of visitors was nearly 700. Each visitor wore a white silk badge printed in purple ink, the bishop's color, furnished by the citizens' committee. There were fifty persons wearing the reception badges — red silk ribbons printed in black ink. The visitors were met at the Milwaukee depot by carriages, 'busses, hacks, etc., and were first taken to the Seabury hall. A visit was also made to the old and original Seabury mission building, known at the "Breck Mission," which is still standing, and is being carefully kept. Next the visitors were taken to the state schools for the blind and feeble minded, and from there they went to St. Mary's hall, the popular school for young ladies. St. Mary's hall was founded in 1866 by Bishop Whipple. From there the visitors went to the Shattuck military school. The ladies of the city served a bountiful luncheon in the armory hall after their arrival at Shattuck. After the luncheon Mayor B. B. Sheffield delivered an address of welcome which was responded to by Bishop A. C. Coxe of Western New York. Other institutions were then visited and the party then returned to Minneapolis.

CITIZENS IN JAIL

PECULIAR OUTCOME OF THE MOORE-NEEDHAM AFFAIR.

Deputy Sheriffs, in Order to Prevent the Fight, Which Had Been Declared Off, Arrest Well Known and Wealthy Steamboat Men.

St. Paul, Oct. 15.—Gov. Clough has proved himself more powerful in enforcing the laws of Minnesota than the managers of the Lakeside Athletic Club of St. Paul were successful in violating them. The prize fight between Danny Needham and Dick Moore, the well known welter-weights, that was to be pulled off Sunday under the auspices of that club, did not occur. The governor prevented it.

Following the arrest of Needham Saturday afternoon by Deputy Sheriff Kinney the promoters of the fight go together and decided to call off the affair. The men could not fight in public, and as there would be nothing in it for them to fight in private they decided not to fight. But this compact was not made public, and in order to make assurance doubly sure the state officials went ahead and arrested the captains, pilots and engineers of the boats that were to take the people to the scene of the battle. The men were arrested by Deputy Sheriffs Picha and Kinney on the strength of allegations contained in warrants, sworn out by D. R. Noyes and W. L. Wilson, charging the men arrested with aiding and abetting prize fighters and conniving to arrange a prize fight.

The men arrested are Capt. John C. Smith, of No. 336 West Third street, captain of the Gracie A. Mower; Capt. P. F. Ritchie, of No. 270 Pleasant avenue, captain and owner of the excursion steamer Daisy; George Tilbury, engineer, and Ariah J. Bosley, pilot, of the steamer Daisy. They were arrested at their respective boats. On being taken to the county jail they were confined in the boys' ward, where they were kept behind bars all day, despite the attempt of friends to have them allowed the freedom of the corridor or to release them from jail. Three of the four arrested are wealthy pioneer residents of St. Paul. Capt. Smith is fifty-eight years old and is said to be worth in the neighborhood of $50,000. Capt. Ritchie is sixty-five years old and is the possessor of a fortune valued at more than $100,000. Despite this aggregate wealth they were compelled to spend the day in prison, since bail could no be given on Sunday.

The river front at the foot of Jackson street was the objective point for several hundred of St. Paul's residents. The people had read in the newspapers that there might be trouble at the levee if an attempt was made to get the fighters out of the state, and as early as 9 o'clock there was quite a crowd at the foot of Jackson street. They stood on the river bank, sat on the steps, and some of the more venturesome got on board the two boats, moored there together. Each boat had in tow a large sized barge, around the railings of which there were arranged a row of chairs. There was no semblance of a ring on either barge, but the wise ones told each other that it would not take long to pitch one.

At 2:15 the president of the Lakeside Athletic club, a much-sought-after man at that time by the authorities, made his way through the crowd brushing past a couple of deputy sheriffs and state officials on his way, stepped on board the raft and informed a couple of men who were in charge that the fight was off. He was accompanied by a reporter, and after leaving the dock he ate dinner at a down-town restaurant, and then called on Dick Moore at his rooms. Dick informed a reporter that he did not intend to lie in jail all day, therefore he was lying quiet. "I am going up to the governor's office to-morrow forenoon," he said, "to give myself up personally to Gov. Clough. If he wants to arrest me he can do so."

Danny Needham was around town all day. "Oh, dear, no," he said. "I would not think of fighting now. It would cause my bondsmen to lose their money by so doing, and besides there's no use of fighting if we can't get any people to see us."

In an interview with Capt. Smith, of the G. A. Mower, at the jail, he informed a reporter that both he and Capt. Ritchie would immediately bring heavy damage suits against the persons causing their arrest and incarceration in jail.

THEATER IN RUINS.

The Temple Opera House at Dulut. Destroyed.

Duluth, Minn., Oct. 15.—The Temple opera house was totally destroyed by fire early Sunday morning, causing a loss of $150,000. The other half of the building, which was separated from the theater by a heavy fire wall, was saved. In the latter half is the Duluth public library, consisting of 18,000 volumes, but this part was only slightly saturated with water and the loss will not be heavy.

On the upper floor were the lodge rooms of the Masonic association, which owns the building, and all the beautiful paraphenalia was destroyed.

Daniel Sully had closed an engagement and left the theater less than an hour before the fire was discovered. The Masonic hall extended across the theater on the sixth floor and the loss to it is probably $5,000.

A Deserter's Ruse.

Pocotello, Idaho, Oct. 15.—Lieut. K. Miller, of the Eighth infantry, stationed about twenty miles from Jackson's Hole, states that J. C. Wilson, who brought the report a week ago of the killing of Capt. Smith and companions in Jackson's Hole is a deserter from the Seventh cavalry in Camp Teton Pass, and that Wilson made the statements in order to obtain a relay of horses and to facilitate his escape. Lieut. Miller says there is no truth whatever in the statement that Capt. Smith was killed

THE FLOYDS.

How the Pardoned Boys Departed From Prison.

Stillwater, Oct. 15. — Frank and Louis Floyd left the prison by virtue of a pardon granted them by Gov. Clough, and it is safe to say that two happier men never left that institution. The pardon was brought over by Hon. George A. Brackett of Minneapolis, and the boys were delighted when they cast aside their first grade prison uniforms and put on nobby suits that had been sent to them from Minneapolis. They could hardly wait for their hour of departure, and carefully noted the fleeting minutes. Arrangements had been made for them to go on the 1:40 Omaha train, and shortly before that time they were driven from the prison to the depot in a hack in company with Mr. Brackett, to whom much credit is due for securing their release. Being asked what their plans were for the future, they replied that they were going to remain in Minneapolis, where they hope to demonstrate by their conduct that they mean to lead honest and honorable lives.

Minneapolis, Oct. 15.—On arriving at the Wessex in Minneapolis, where their mother has been stopping, the Floyd boys were greeted by the host of friends who have stood by them in their misfortune. Many of these friends were of the fair sex, and their welcome home was one that many a man would spend months in confinement to receive. When a reporter arrived at the Wessex the crowd of friends had gone and the happy mother was alone with her darlings. Mrs. Floyd's great joy at getting them home again was so great that she could not keep still a minute, but was constantly on the move to provide for their comfort.

Both of the boys show the palor in their faces that comes from confinement, but a few days in the open air will soon restore the color to their faces. Frank has been sick for some time, and said that he was used as a lay figure for the graduates from the university to practice on. He said that this was the only enjoyment he had while in Stillwater. Lou bears on his head a scar that he got in the shoe shop in the prison from the breaking of a piece of machinery.

It will be gratifying to consumers to note that the quality of the baking powder most generally in use in their kitchens, the Royal, is confirmed by the highest official authorities as altogether the best of any in the market.

HAYWARD'S SCHEME.

AN ATTEMPT TO ESCAPE THE NOOSE BY FLIGHT.

Duplicate Keys Captured Which Exactly Fit the Jail Doors—A Jail Employe Who Had Been Approached Tells the Sheriff of the Plan.

Minneapolis, Oct. 13.—Through the efforts of the sheriff and Mike Kierce, assistant janitor at the court house, a plan to liberate Harry Hayward and secure his escape from the gallows has been frustrated. The duplicate keys which had been prepared to open the locks to the cell and the jail were brought to the sheriff yesterday and found to be keys which would accomplish the end for which they were designed.

"I suppose you heard all about it?" said a man in the court house corridor to a reporter.

Ignorance was pleaded, and the man went on to say, "Mike got 'em."

"Mike? Mike who?"

"Mike Kierce. He got 'em from the old lady."

"What old lady?"

"Why, Harry's mother."

These few words told the tale. For a long time the court house officials have been unusually alert with regard to Harry Hayward. It has all along been the opinion that Harry, notwithstanding his pleasant exterior, was a mighty bad man, and the few words let fall carelessly from the lips of the man in the corrodor carry out this theory.

Further inquiry developed the fact that Mike Kierce has not been at work for one or two nights past, and has in fact been doing a little detective work on his own account. It was surmised that a plot had been laid to effect a jail delivery. Extra precautions were taken. A night watchman was put on at Sheriff Holmberg's request and care was redoubled. It had been told the sheriff that one of the men in connection with the department had been approached and told that if a delivery could be effected there would be money in it. The man who was approached was the one who told the sheriff, preferring honor and integrity than money.

Kierce was interested in the case and began his work. So carefully and successfully did he labor that last night he brought to the sheriff the duplicate keys which had been found. Here was a find indeed. The keys were taken up to Harry's cell and one of them tried on the padlock. It fitted perfectly and turned with ease, liberating the lock from the hasp. The other key was tried in the door below at the entrance of the jail proper. It, too, fitted. All that was necessary to carry on the plot was right in those two little pieces of metal.

It is supposed that the delivery was to have been effected in a night or two at most, and the authorities had hoped that the affair might have been kept from the ears of the public until the attempt had been made and the conspirators secured.

Minneapolis, Oct. 15.—Sunday morning at 1:30 was the day and hour when Harry Hayward expected to leave the Hennepin county jail and start on his journey to Africa, but instead of liberty the murderer of Miss Ging occupies a cell that can be more closely watched from all sides, and trusty deputies watch every move made by the prisoner.

To Michael Kierce is given the credit of preventing the delivery. He suspected something wrong, became a confidant of Hayward, and secured from Mrs. Hayward the duplicate key.

After the exposure the jig was up, and the most important thing which happened was the search of Hayward's cell, which was accomplished by Deputy Sheriff Phil Megaarden, Otto E. Langum, Lewis Maish and Gordon Bright. Hayward's plan had been changed. When it became known that the plot was to be given publicity Mike Kierce, janitor at the court house, whom Hayward thought to be in the plot, informed the prisoner that the attempt was to be made twenty-four hours earlier than expected. Hayward stood leaning against the bars of his cell, dreaming of the liberty only a few hours away, when the little party of deputies surprised him. The awful truth that his little plot had been discovered flashed upon him at once, and his face fell as he saw his death warrant was as good as sealed.

First, they searched his pockets and all they found was $36 in bills and silver. Kierce had, however, instructed the party that Hayward had recently secured more money and the search was continued. The prisoner was told to strip, and he stripped when the command was given in a tone of voice that did not admit of argument. Under his underclothing, next to his flesh, was found a belt. There were three compartments in this belt. One contained $7.20 in cash and another $500 in cash. Bills were used and they were of a large denomination so that they could be compressed into the smallest possible space.

There was another article in the canvas belt and it was a cipher. From its appearance it is evident that there are two ciphers and it is supposed that it was prearranged so that Hayward might communicate with friends who have the key, and after his liberation he would let them know exactly what route he had traveled and where he was, without disclosing the nature of his trip to any one who might take it upon himself to examine the mail received by his friends. During his talks with Kierce Harry had stated that his plan was to secrete himself in a freight car with two horses and a carriage and go to the Pacific coast, and from there would make his way to Africa.

What blessings have followed the refusal of the farmers last year to inaugurate a political revolution tending towards a change of existing systems. It is terrible to think of the prices they would now be taking for their produce if they had been so foolish!! It is safe to say, at all events, that the present splendid prices would not have been realized.—F S & H.

The St. Cloud Journal-Press serves notice on the capital commission in advance that they should see to it that the new building should be built entirely of Minnesota materials' by Minnesota men. That's right; besides patronizeing home industry, it will give every citizen of the state an additional interest in the building, and will be a big card for the state,

The state auditor is authorrty for the statement' that the November settlement this year will be the largest the state has ever known, The people in the southern part of the state have taken warning from the auditor's largely advertised notice that he should offer again for sale this fall all lands upon which the payments were delinquent five or more years He reports from Jackson county, where he recently held a sale that nearly ever tract was reduced and taxes paid consequently there will be a largely, swollen county and state treasury.

While the farmer can by any possibility live' the mass of the people are contented, perfectly willing to exist and refuse to do any thing towards changing systems that vouchsafe to our fundamental industry no more than the poor privelege of existance, Suppose, oh ye patient, apathetic mass that the farmer could more than merely exist' that he could make money just imagine how business would snap and crack with activity, energy and expansion! How factories would start, how labor would be employed and paid, how the wheels of commerce would hum, how the whole land would wrinkle with the joyous laughter of prosperity and happiness!! There is already due th s fund about 240,000 acres from surveyed townships and that with a remainder to come from those unsurveyed will bring the aggregate up to about 275'000 acres. The auditor had no funds to meet this expense but had he waited an appropriation from the legislature' it would have been too late and settlers would have occupied all the territory, thus barring the state out. Auditor Dunn found the means and started the cruisers, thus putting another laurel in his wreath,

In 1878, in reference to the effort then being made to kill silver as money of redemption, James G. Blaine said:

"I believe that the struggle now going on in this country and in other countries for a single standard would 'f successful' produce, widespread disaster in and throughout the commercial world, The distruction of silver as a money and the establishment of gold as the sole unit of value must have a ruinous effect on all forms of property' except those investments which yield a fixed return in money These would be enormously enhanced in value and would gain a disproportionately unfair advantage over every other specie of properity If as the most reliable statistics affirm, there are nearly $7,000,000,0 .0 of coin or bullion, in the world, not very unequally divided between gold and silver; it is impossible to strike the silver out of existence as money without results that will prove distressing to millions and utterly disastrous to tens of thousands.

The distress is now self evident: and in one respect, at least' Mr. Blaine proved himself a prophet—F. S, & H'

A prominent business man of one of the interior cities of Minnesota in a letter from South Dakota where he was staying at the time, writes to ask about storing onions, which is answered in short talks in this number, and also the following.

This place has probably 50.000 bushel of fine onions for which no offer can be obtained and the toilsome work of many for the past season is without compensation, With the earth giving forth in abundance, some of the yes many are no better off than seven months ago. A farmer from Clinton, Minn. just tells me that he had to sell good wheat (graded No 2) for 39 cents 1'000 bushels for $390. And here we business men and farmers stand by and let this product be sacrificed, and with it our prosperity'

Some three years ago this gentleman and F. S. &H. found a parting of the ways in the silver question. He believ in a metallic basis for currency believed in a commodity measure of and that commodity should be gold for a double standard could not be maintained.', To avoid the dread double standard he was in favor of discarding silver as primary money as a joint measure of value with gold as it had been for ages, and so put the whole work of sustaining the currency of the world and measuring the value of every article in the world up on a mass of metal of only half the value of that formerly used. He could not seem to see that cutting supply in halves, leaving the demand as before, would inevitable double the value of the supply' and since that supply was the measure of all values it must of necessity take double the quantity of all other articles to buy a given quantity of it. We say and he says, that onions and wheat are low, but that is not correct gold is high and so it takes more onions and wheat to buy it. This devotion to gold must necessarily limit the volume of dollars and onions and wheat plentiful and dollars scarce it must take a greatly disproportionate quantity of these products to buy one of those dollars. Our correspondent is experiencing the inexorable logic of his own doctrine,—F S H

A HUMAN WINDMILL.

He Is a Busy Flagman at a Cable Curve In New York.

Have you seen the man who leads the most exciting life in New York city?

If not, look out for him the next time you ride up town on the Columbus avenue cable. He stands at the curve where the cars swing at full speed back and forth around the corner of Fifty-third street and Ninth avenue, and his business is to see that the way is clear of cars and wagons and pedestrians.

He is a young, active fellow, and he holds a red flag in one hand and a white flag in the other. His eyes must be all ways at once, and at his order cars start and stop, drivers haul horses upon their haunches, and timid passersby scurry back from the crossing to the safety of the curb.

Woe be to him if a collision occurs or a child is run down and killed, for he alone is of authority on that busy corner, and all who pass there must needs trust his quick eye and cool judgment. He alone stands where both ways can be seen, for Fifty-third street is narrow, Ninth avenue crowded and both streets darkened and impeded by the elevated railway structures.

So upon him alone hangs safety, and upon him all eyes are fixed. His is the responsibility.

It is a sorry mechanical necessity that compels cable cars to swing curves at full speed. Such is the case, however, it being requisite to getting around at all that the grip must hang tightly fast to the moving cable down in the slot. That is what makes life so lively for the flagman at the curve, and no curve in the city is half so dangerous as the one at Fifty-third street and Ninth avenue.

Stop and watch him in the middle of the afternoon, say when the shopping crowds occasion an increase in the cable service, and Ninth avenue is thronged with trucks and business wagons and pedestrians. He spins around like a top in his effort to see all ways at the same moment. A cable car comes clanging of Fifty-third street just as one rumbles down the avenue, and a horse car is switching into the Ninth avenue stable at the corner. There is a jam of trucks and a couple of bicyclists in the roadway, while 20 men and women are crossing in various directions. What a moment for a fine catastrophe!

Up goes the red flag as a warning to the car on Fifty-third street to stop, and the white flag in the busy fellow's other hand waves to a heavy truck to pass along. Get out of the way there, you wheelmen! Didn't you see the red flag waving at you? And now the white flag motions a herd of pedestrians across one corner and signals a butcher wagon and a handcart to push ahead. The flagman's two arms wave like those of a windmill for two minutes. And now the corner is clear, except that that plagued horse car still blocks the way. No, not Back! The red flag warns the impatient gripman on the cable car in Fifty-third street.

But the south bound car can now pass, and the white flag gives the signal. It rattles round the corner with many a clang and disappears, only to give way to another following in its wake.

And now the horse car is started and the cable car in Fifty-third street may make the corner. The white flag waves, while the red flag frantically warns back a nervous woman who is about to run across the tracks.

And so it goes all day long. The man at the corner is an athlete, a gymnast, a living windmill. And, thanks to him, this corner, naturally the most dangerous on the cable, has a record equal to any and better than most.—New York Herald.

Animals That Commit Suicide.

Intelligent observers have testified to facts which appear to show that in certain circumstances the snake, scorpion and even some quadrupeds commit suicide. M. Henry, a clock manufacturer of Longuyon, France, has recently described an experiment of the kind which he made with a wasp. The wasp was imprisoned under a glass, and knowing that benzine asphyxiates insects he put some paper soaked in it beside the captive. The wasp became uncomfortable, then angrily attacked the paper, but finding all its efforts unavailing it finally lay down on its back, and folding up its abdomen planted its sting thrice into its body. M. Henry was so curious to confirm the fact that, in spite of his humane feelings, he repeated the experiment on three wasps, with the like result.—London Globe.

Unselfish.

Fuddy—Why doesn't Snipson try to elevate himself instead of all the time exhorting others to live purer and better lives?

Duddy—Because there is nothing selfish in Snipson's composition. He is willing that others should reap the rewards which follow exemplary conduct.—Boston Transcript.

AN ANCIENT LEGEND.

A Werewolf Story That Was Popular In the Olden Days.

One of the most popular old time werewolf stories which have been preserved in the folklore legends of the French people is that which has been versified by John Caine and Marie de France under the peculiar head of "Bisclaveret." The truth of the matter is that Bisclaveret is simply the Breton name for the ghostly creation called the werewolf, and that, curiously enough, it has been made a proper name in the legend referred to. According to the story, a noble lady who had married a courtier in high favor with the king of France noticed, to her horror, that her husband was regularly absent for three days out of each week, always disappearing and reappearing as mysteriously as a ghost. One day, after a regular three days' absence, the husband was pressed for an explanation of his peculiar conduct, whereupon he reluctantly acknowledged to the heartbroken wife that he was a werewolf, and that for three days of each week he was condemned to assume the wolf's form and shape. The lady bore with this queer conduct for some time, and then resolved to rid herself of a mate who had such uncanny and objectionable habits. She finally entered into an intrigue with one of the court favorites, and the two, having heard that if the werewolf's clothes could be stolen during one of his trips to the lairs of the real wolves he would be unable to assume human shape upon his return, watched and got possession of his garments.

From that day forward the husband did not return, and the heartless lady and the false cavalier soon married. Some weeks later, when the king was out hunting, a wolf that had been sorely pressed by the dogs made its way to him and looked into the king's eyes with such a mute but humanlike appeal that the monarch's heart was touched with pity for the bedraggled creature. The king spared the beast's life, and out of gratitude it followed him home and soon became a great favorite at the royal castle.

One day the false cavalier and the heartless lady visited the king and his family. No sooner did the formerly docile and very tractable wolf spy the couple than he jumped upon and severely bit the man and then vented his fury by taking a savage nip at the lady's face, biting off her nose. The cavalier and his men drew their swords and were preparing to slay the beast, when the wise old king demanded to know why the gentle beast should show such spite toward the visitor and his wife. Finally they confessed to the clothes stealing scrape during one of the wolflike metamorphoses of the former husband. The king demanded that the clothes be immediately brought; the wolf again assumed human shape, much to the joy of the monarch and the chagrin of the guilty pair. The cavalier and the false lady were ignominiously banished to an island, where they lived many years, raising a large family of children, the girls being all noseless.—St. Louis Republic.

Opium Eating In Rajputana.

Opium eating, according to the Maharajah Bahadur of Durbhanga, is largely practiced in Rajputana on festive occasions as a token of welcome to guests and friends. When two enemies wish to end a long standing feud, they generally go through this ceremony. They each drink a small quantity of the preparation of opium called "amulpani" from the hands of the other, and this is recognized as making the ties of friendship inviolable. In certain localities opium is consumed at funerals, marriages, betrothals and other ceremonies. Among the Kathis of Kathiwar it would be considered an offense if the guest refused to take opium on occasions like these. In the Punjab a large proportion of the adult male population take opium in small doses as a stimulant, without much or any apparent harm. It is looked upon as a digestive and a very beneficial tonic for a man who has reached middle age.—London News.

New York Is a Big Place.

Two men who had been schoolmates in Kentucky met in Broadway on a recent morning.

"Hello!" said one. "I haven't seen you in ten years. Going to be here long? I'd like to talk over old times with you."

"Going to be here long?" repeated the other. "I've lived here for eight years. My office is in Broadway here. Are you just here on a visit?"

"Great Scott, no! This has been my home for six years. I've been here all that time. Funny we never met before, isn't it?"

And they agreed that New York was a big place.—New York Tribune.

Scarlet Fever Settled in the Back

AN OPERATION WAS UNSUCCESSFULLY PERFORMED.

The Patient Was Finally Restored, After Eighteen Years.

From the Evening News, Newark, N. J.

About eighteen years ago, when Mrs. Annie Dale, of 88 Bruce Street, was a bright, merry school girl, she was taken ill with scarlet fever. She recovered, but she was a very different girl from a physical standpoint. She was cured of the scarlet fever but it left her with an affection of the back. As she grew older the pain seemed to increase. Her sufferings were intensified by her household duties, but she never complained, and with one hand pressed tightly to her back she did her work about her cozy home.

"I was fourteen years old when I was attacked with scarlet fever, and have now suffered with my back for eighteen years.

"Night and day I suffered. It really seemed as if I must succumb to the pain, and then to make matters worse, my head ached so badly that I could scarcely see, at times. Finally I went to St. Michael's Hospital, at the corner of High Street and Central Avenue, and there the surgeons performed a difficult operation on my back but it did no good; it was like everything else. I was told at the hospital to return for another operation, but the first had left me so weak I could not go back. Then again I had become discouraged and my three children needed my attention and care at home. The pain became harder to stand and my back was almost broken, it seemed. I thought I would never know what it would be like to be well again when I was told to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. With many doubts, a faint heart and an aching back I went to get the pills, and little dreaming that they would prove the elixir of a new life to me, I began to take them. Only a short time elapsed before I began to improve. Could it be possible that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were doing what everything else had failed to accomplish! I asked myself the question many times and before long I was enabled by my improved condition to answer the query with an emphatic 'Yes.' Now the pain of almost twenty years is cured by these Pink Pills in a few months. I have no pain of any kind now, but I have got some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and while I do not think it will ever be necessary to use them again, I shall certainly never be without them in the house."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Thousands of Hogs Dying.

The farmers of McLean and adjacent counties (Ill.) are greatly alarmed over the seemingly irresistible ravages of disease which have already destroyed many thousands of hogs, and threatens to exterminate that class of animals in the affected territory. So far no remedy seems to have had the least effect in checking its progress. When once the disease once makes its appearance on a farm the hogs are doomed. The disease differs radically from what has heretofore been known as cholera. The hog swells up and in many instances bursts just before death. The post-mortem examination shows a highly inflamed and congested conditions of the organs. The disease is found in nearly every township in this county and in many parts of the adjacent counties.

That Joyful Feeling

With the exhilarating sense of renewed health and strength and internal cleanliness which follows the use of Syrup of Figs is unknown to the few who have not progressed beyond the old time medicines and the cheap substitutes sometimes offered but never accepted by the well informed.

Robinson—I always like Toddles' parties. He always makes one feel at home, don't you know?

Penhecker (with a shudder)—Yes, I know; that's why I never go.

"I have tried Parker's Ginger Tonic and believe in it," says a mother, and so will you say when familiar with its vitalizing properties.

Sir Isaac Newton could remember the first six powers of every number under one hundred.

Just how it is done is not the question. It is enough to know that Hindercorns takes out the corns, and a very pleasing relief it is. 15c. at druggists.

RHEUMATISM.

Torture and Agony are Its Attendants, In Addition to this, the Fear of Sudden Death.

Rheumatism, as is well known, is caused by acids existing in the blood, due to poisonous secretions from some of the great life centres of the body; which, if not counteracted and carried off increases from day to day, causing the sufferer endless pain, until the disease finally reaches the heart, where, by a sudden contraction the end is suddenly reached. The cure for this terrible affliction is in every instance Kickapoo Indian Sagwa. It acts directly on the stomach liver and kidneys, promoting perfect action of these organs. In addition it purifies the blood, which, thus enriched, dispels all poisonous secretions and performs its natural function of nourishing the body. One of many instances where it has been a benefit is the case of Mrs. Jennie Chambers, of Ridgway, California, who writes: "I was a great sufferer from Rheumatism and Dropsy. I had been afflicted for years, and tried all our local doctors and many medicines, but could get no relief. My limbs were so badly swollen I could not stand. I commenced using the Kickapoo Indian Remedies, and in seven days the pains were all gone. The Dropsy was cured, and I thank the good Lord for the day I commenced using Kickapoo Indian Sagwa. You may use my name if you wish. Everyone in this county knows me."

Sufferers everywhere should follow Mrs. Chamber's example. Use Kickapoo Indian Oil for external application; it relieves the local pain, while the Kickapoo Indian Sagwa is removing the cause of the trouble from the system. The Kickapoo Indian Remedies are absolutely harmless, and may be obtained at all druggists. Kickapoo Indian Oil, 25 cents a bottle. Kickapoo Indian Sagwa, $1.00 a bottle; 6 bottles for $5.00.

THE CZAR'S CORONATION.

Next Spring's Ceremonies Will Cost Over $5,000,000.

The imperial coronation shortly to take place in Moscow will doubtless be one of the grandest state displays ever witnessed in Europe. Russian coronations are not numerous; an occasion of this kind comes but once in a lifetime, and the policy of the Russian imperial family has always been to dazzle the eyes of their subjects by magnificent court dramas, in which the czar is really a czar. To this end Russian coronations have been made as splendid as the resources of the empire could permit. The coronation of the emperor who has just passed away cost over $4,000,000; that of his predecessor considerably over $5,000,000; but in case a show was provided for the people of Russia that was vividly remembered until supplanted in the popular mind by the splendors of the next. The coronation is regarded as much more than the simple act of placing a bauble on the head of the first man in the state; it is a series of gorgeous ceremonials, and the people of every nation that forms a part of the greatest empire on the earth are required, through their representatives, to assist, while the spectacle is made still more brilliant by the presence of the embassadors of every power on the globe, and of large numbers of princes of the reigning houses, for royalty always assembles on these occasions to congratulate the newly crowned monarch.

The preparations for a Russian coronation are very elaborate, and comprise, among other things, the laying up of great stores of provisions in Moscow, for the houses of that venerable city are compelled, on coronation occasions, to entertain from 500,000 to 600,000 strangers who journey to witness the ceremonies. Every province in the empire sends a deputation; every tribe in the far-away districts of Siberia, on the steppes of Central Asia, from the Khivans to the Esquimaux along the shores of Bering strait, sends one or more representatives to present the homage of the tribe to the great White Czar. Poles, Finlanders, Laplanders, Cossacks, Russians of a dozen names, Circassians, Georgians, Bashkirs, Turks—for the Russian empire contains millions of Mohammedans, Tcherkesses, Abassians, Calmucks, Tartars, Karapapaks, Daghistanis, Armenians, Kurds, Chinese from the districts conquered by Russia from China, Mongols, deputies from dozens of wandering nations in the heart of Asia; for over fifty languages and double that number of dialects are spoken in the Russian dominions, and the people of every language must present their homage to the czar in their own tongue. The imperial coronations always take place in the Cathedral of the Assumption, one of the many in the Kremlin.—Boston Transcript.

What a Man's Tailor Knows.

A well known fashionable Chestnut street tailor declares, as the result of many years' observation, that but one man in 100 has square shoulders; that is, shoulders of an equal height. When Buffalo Bill, whose magnificent physique has been the admiration of two hemispheres, was last in this city he was measured for a suit of clothing in this sartorial establishment, and when the many mysterious figures had been called off, the craftsman cried out to the clerk: "Low left shoulder." Col. Cody indignantly exclaimed: "What's that? There's nothing the matter with my shoulders." And it required considerable argument to convince him that his right shoulder was very considerably higher than the left, the explanation being found in the fact that in shooting his right shoulder is lifted much higher than its fellow. Traveling salesmen are noticeably lower in the right shoulder, by reason of the fact that they are almost continually carrying heavy packages with the right hand. In fact, nearly all men are lower in the right shoulder, but a small minority, especially newspaper writers and bookkeepers, are lower in the left shoulder, as a result of the position which they assume in writing, the support of the right elbow on the desk throwing the right shoulder upward. This is not visible in many people when walking the streets, because careful merchant tailors remedy the defect by a little extra padding in the shoulder which is lowest.—Philadelphia Times.

Restaurant Cranks.

Plenty of cranks haunt the table d'hotes. One who is conspicuous in the Tenderloin centers owns a white rabbit that he always carries with him, and for which he orders a large portion of lettuce while he solemnly consumes his own meal. Bunny is attached to his master's coat collar by a large silver chain and roams in and out of the capacious pockets at will. Another habitue of the same establishment absorbs two complete dinners, from hors d'oeuvres to coffee, one after the other. At another restaurant not far away a forlorn-looking, middle-aged woman also orders two dinners, but one of them is served on the opposite side of the table and the courses are carried away untouched when she has finished her own. Possibly a romance is concealed in the untouched courses. She alone can tell.—New York Letter.

Electric Freak in a Tunnel.

North Adams continues to be puzzled over a queer crankism of electricity in its vicinity. Although when the great four and one-half mile Hoosac Tunnel was built no ores, magnetic or otherwise, were encountered, there was a general expectation that rich ore pockets would be found; yet, for an unexplained reason, not an electrician has been discovered who can send a telegraphic message on a wire running from portal to portal of that tunnel, be such wire run inside of an ocean cable through the huge cavern or out of it. Therefore, such messages have to be sent on wires strung on poles over the top of the mountains, fully nine miles, and that is the way in-going and out-going passenger and freight trains are heralded to the keepers of the two tunnel approaches.—Boston Journal of Commerce.

All a Mistake.

The reporter that had accompanied the special train to the scene of the wreck hurried down the embankment and found a man who had one arm in a sling, a bandage over one eye, his front teeth gone and his nose knocked four points starboard, sitting on a piece of the locomotive and surveying the horrible ruin all about him.

"Can you give me some particulars of this accident?" he asked, taking out his note-book.

"I haven't heard of any accident, young man," replied the disfigured party, stiffly.

He was one of the directors of the company.—Pearson's Weekly.

How to Remove Tattoo Marks.

The example of the Duke of York, the future King of England, who has had some elaborate designs tatooed on his arm, is said to have set the English aristocracy wild, and tattooing has become the rage. On the other hand there are many people who have submitted themselves to this needle and ink decoration, who have outlived their pride in it, and who feel rather ashamed of what they formerly looked upon as a distinction. For the benefit of such a medical correspondent tells how tattoo marks may be removed. The marks are painted over with a concentrated solution of tannin. Afterwards, by means of fine needles a series of pickings is made over the tattooed design, and over the surface thus picked is passed a stick of nitrate of silver. At the end of a few minutes the black pickings previously made becomes detached, and the superficial layers of skin are charged with a tannate of silver. In order that the process may be perfectly successful this surface must be powdered with tannin for two or three days. At the end of that time, the inflammatory action has almost subsided, and the picked parts turn black, forming a thin crust, very adherent to the deeper skin, but painless. In fourteen or fifteen days the scab falls off, and in its place is seen a superficial red mark, which gradually fades away until, at the end of a few months, all signs of coloration disappear. Of course, antiseptic precautions are duly taken in performing this operation. The old tattoo needle is the best thing it can be done with. Dr. Baillot suggests that bioxalate of potassium is even better for the purpose of tattoo marks removal than nitrate of silver.

Paper Pulp for Leaks.

Paper pulp is one of the most useful articles in the reach of mankind. Mixed with glue and plaster of paris or Portland cement, it is the best thing to stop cracks and breaks in wood. The pulp must be kept in a close-stoppered bottle, in order that the moisture may not evaporate. When required for use, make it of the consistency of thin gruel with hot water, add plaster of paris to make it slightly pasty, and use it at once. For leakage around pipes, to stop the overflow of water in stationary washstands, where the bowl and the upper slab join, it is invaluable. Used with care, it will stop leaks in iron pipes, provided the water can be shut off long enough to allow it to set. Around the empty pipe wrap a single thickness or two of cheese cloth just wide enough to cover the break, then apply the compound, pressing it in place and making an oval of it somewhat after the fashion of lead pipe-joining, only larger. The strength of this paste, when once it is thoroughly hardened, is almost beyond belief. The bit of cheese cloth prevents any clogging of the pipe by the paste working through the cracks. Paper pulp and fine sawdust boiled together for hours, and mixed with glue dissolved in linseed oil, makes a perfect filling for cracks in floors. It may be put on and left until partly dry, then covered with paraffine and smoothed with a hot iron.

Mortality of Telegraphists.

The telegraphists in the service of the London Postoffice have at last succeeded in securing an inquiry into their grievances by a government special committee. Some of the rules of the postoffice which the telegraphists complain of are roughly handled by the English medical press. Much complaint is made against the practice of the weekly changing of the hours of work, necessitating change of habits, irregularity of meals, etc., to the great detriment of health. The most startling part of the evidence, however, is that which shows the large preponderance of phthisis among the causes of death in the telegraph service, which produces a mortality greater than that among the Sheffield grinders, a trade which has hitherto been considered as most fatal in respiratory diseases. An authoritative table, prepared by a first-class telegraphist, shows that in cases of death from respiratory diseases, including phthisis, up to 55 years of age, the telegraphist's average is 59.5 as against 57.3 of that of the cutlery trade. These diseases are responsible for a death rate of 24.4 of the adult male population between the ages of 15 and 55, so they are nearly two and one-half times more fatal in the telegraph service than among the ordinary population. In phthisis alone the ration is still more striking. Telegraphists, 46.6; grinders, 33.1; average male, 13.8.

The United States Government Chemist, after an examination for the Indian Department, made the emphatic statement that "The Royal Baking Powder is the purest in quality and highest in strength of any baking powder of which I have knowledge."

Trolleys and Canals.

Along the Erie canal, beginning at Tonawanda and going toward Buffalo, five miles, 200 men are at work erecting posts and wires for the first official trial of electric trolleys for motors on the State canal. The work will be carried on under the personal direction of Richard Lamb, inventor of the electric cableway for canal boat hauling, which has been adopted by the Niagara Cataract company, and which will be tested before state officials within the next week. The Cataract company has the state franchise to tow all boats on the Erie canal for ninety-nine years at a maximum charge of $20 per horse-power annually.

New Use for Cottonseed Oil.

An expert says that there is a fine field in the South for the establishment of plants for making what he calls "dressing yolk." This is the technical name for the dressing placed on cakes, pies, biscuits, etc., to give them an attractive finish. After a careful trial he is convinced that the preparation which can be made from cottonseed oil is far superior to that derived from eggs alone. The yolk made from the oil will probably take the place of the ordinary preparation, for besides being a better substance for the purposes of pastry cooks, it can be put into the market at a greatly reduced price.

Aluminum Boats.

A practical test was made of aluminum in the construction of small boats by Mr. Walter Wellman, who had three constructed to carry his polar expedition last year. These boats, it was said at the Navy Department, had been brought back to Washington, and an examination some time ago showed that the material had so deteriorated that it could be easily crumbled in one's hand.

A FILTER INSIDE YOU

HOW YOUR BLOOD IS KEPT PURE.

Health Comes From Pure Blood, Pure Blood Depends on Your Filter Inside too.

Your Kidneys Keep Your Blood Pure If They Are Well. A Few Facts About Them, and How to Make Them Well When They Are Sick.

Your blood is what nourishes your body.

New blood is made every minute. It goes to the lungs, gets fresh air, and then passes through the body. In passing, it deposits new flesh, fat, bones, etc., and takes up worn out matter.

This worn out matter goes to the kidneys. The kidneys filter it out of the blood and throw it out of the body.

That is, when they are well, they do.

When your kidneys are well, they act as perfect filters, to keep your blood pure. When they are sick, they act imperfectly. They leave the bad matter in. Sometimes they take out the good.

There is nothing more poisonous than bad blood.

A proof of this is rheumatism. It is simply a blood-poisoning caused by the bad matter left in the blood by sick kidneys.

Bright's disease is the kidneys working the other way—taking the good food out of the blood.

Both kinds of kidney sickness are dangerous.

Both can be cured by Dr. Hobb's Sparagus Kidney Pills.

One of the most wonderful facts of our body is this natural filter inside us. Our kidneys are very important organs. We don't take enough care of them. We are sick oftener than there is any need for. It is simply because we take no heed to our kidneys.

Sick kidneys show their effects in many different diseases.

Rheumatism and Bright's Disease are very common. Anaemia, Neuralgia, Pain in the Back, Dizziness, Bladder Trouble, Gravel, Diabetes, Sleeplessness, Nervousness.

These are only a few symptoms, or so-called "diseases." Back of them all are the sick kidneys.

Once the filters can be made to work, all these symptoms will disappear.

Dr. Hobb's Sparagus Kidney Pills are made principally from the roots of the asparagus plant, which has a special curative action on the kidneys. It gives them new life and strength. It helps them to do their work as it ought to be done. It cures their sickness. It cleans and renews the filter.

When the kidneys are well you will feel a great difference at once. Your complexion will clear, and your whole body will get renewed life and freshness.

This is the effect of Dr. Hobb's Sparagus Kidney Pills on the sick kidneys, of the re-vitalized kidneys on the impure blood.

With a course of Dr. Hobb's Sparagus Kidney Pills you will get new life. They will cure you when other medicines, which do not reach the real seat of disease, cannot help you.

Dr. Hobb's Sparagus Kidney Pills are for sale by all druggists, price, 50c. per box, or will be sent prepaid to any address on receipt of price.

An interesting booklet, explaining about the kidneys and their power for good and evil, sent free on request. Address Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago, or San Francisco.

HE FISHED FOR THE NICKELS.

Times Have Changed in the Boom Towns of the Far West.

Times have changed and Western people are trying to learn the lessons of economy. An incident which I witnessed is an apt illustration of the difference between now and then.

Leaving my or more or less sumptuous quarters at the Crazy Horse Hotel, I walked down to the lake. Some distance away from shore I saw a man in a boat. He was fishing.

"Who is that man?" I inquired of a native.

"Why that is Jimmie Graham, who owns the Blazing Stump Hotel. Five years ago," continued my informant, "times were flush, and Jimmie, who was flush, collected all the dimes and nickels in town. There was about half a bushel of them and they had been brought in here by tenderfeet.

"Jimmie disliked to make any change less than two bits, so he tied in a sack all the nickels and dimes and threw them into the lake.

"Since the era of hard times set in Jimmie goes out on every pleasant day to fish for that sack of small silver coins, which he would be glad to have to buy bread with now."

This illustrates the Western character—generous, but improvident, and a firm believer in the old adage that "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."—Chicago Tribune.

A Woman's Invention.

Mme. Zenowsky, who, although the wife of a Russian, is an American, has made a fortune by the invention of a new material manufactured from lard and valuable for use in making paper flowers tissue paper and various other purposes. The invention came about from the fact that Mme. Zenowsky was doing light housekeeping in two rooms, and having placed a paper of lard on the window sill she noticed that a chemical change produced by the weather had taken place in the lard next the paper, making a thin substance like transparent paper. Experimenting, she was at last able to produce this substance artificially.—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE EYE OF THE NEEDLE.

How an Important Discovery was Made in a Dream.

Elias Howe almost beggared himself before he discovered where the eye of the needle of a sewing machine should be located. His original idea was to follow the model of the eye at the heel. It never occurred to him that it should be placed near the point, and he might have failed altogether if he had not dreamed he was building a sewing machine for a savage king in a strange country. Just as in his actual waking experience, he was rather perplexed about the needle's eye. He thought the king gave him twenty-four hours to complete a machine and make it sew. If not finished in that time, death was to be the punishment. Howe worked and worked and puzzled and puzzled, and finally gave it up. Then he thought he was taken out to be executed. He noticed that the warriors carried spears that were pierced near the head. Instantly came the solution of the difficulty, and while the inventor was begging for time he awoke. It was 4 o'clock in the morning. He jumped out of bed, ran to his workshop and by 9 a needle with an eye had been rudely modeled. After that it was easy. This is the true story of an important incident in the invention of the sewing machine.

Enoch Arden Up a Tree.

A paper in Western Nebraska contain the outline of a story that should be slung into undying verse by a poet as good as the author of "Enoch Arden." Some years ago in the town where the paper is published there lived a man who had a wife and daughter. He seemed prosperous, and his credit was good for anything he desired.

One fine, starlight night, he disappeared, taking with him nearly everything that wasn't nailed down. He had made about every man in town his creditor, and when he went away the people betook themselves into outer darkness for awhile and wailed and gnashed their teeth.

The wife and daughter were treated the same as the rest. They found themselves destitute. The fiend in human form who had so long officiated as husband and father had left them not a dollar. The lady and her daughter were, of course, looked coldly upon for awhile, as people believed them to be in collusion with the departed. But they were not depressed by this. They went manfully to work like little heroines in a play, the mother did sewing and the daughter did whatever she could get to do. They prospered, as they deserved to prosper. The older heroine in time established a millinery store, which captured all the trade, while the younger became principal of the schools. They had money in the bank, and could eat ice-cream whenever they wanted to.

The other day a seedy tramp called at the back door of the lady's residence and asked for a drink and something to eat. The good woman looked at him intently and recognized her husband. And now the really beautiful part of this story comes in. Did the lady kill the fatted calf for the prodigal and bid him welcome and forget the past? Not to any great extent.

She called the family dog, a large creature, with a penchant for human remains, and no man ever climbed a tree quicker than did the erring husband.—Nebraska State Journal.

No Tips in Japan.

In Europe a traveler is compelled to everybody connected with a train or a railway station if he wants to protect him from annoyance. He has to fee the baggagemen, the porters, the conductors, the guards and all hands, and the treatment he receives is governed by his generosity. In Japan you are expected to give a penny to the porter who carries your luggage from the jinrikisha to the baggage room, for that is his "pidgin," and he receives no pay from the railroad, but if you offered a fee of any amount to any one else he would be grossly insulted. The same is true of policemen. As an illustration, I carelessly left a notebook on the seat of a car in which I had traveled from Tokio to Yokohama, and did not discover my loss until the train had left the next station. I went to the station master, who immediately sent a telegram to the man in charge of the train, and I found my notebook awaiting me when I returned to the hotel at Tokio that evening. Afterward I offered to pay the station master and the telegraph operator for their trouble. They made very polite bows and assured me that they felt greatly honored by having an opportunity to do me a service, but declined to accept money.—Correspondence of the Chicago Record.

A Tame Humming Bird.

A tame humming bird, which had been domiciled at Mr. and Mrs. Whitten's, near the camp ground station, at Old Orchard, all summer, is still an object of wonder and interest to many people who call to watch the movements of this diminutive pet. The bird has become perfectly domesticated, and has been allowed to fly in and out the house at pleasure by a window that has been left open for it. It is one of the family, and enjoys its privileges as such. By night it perches on a piece of clothesline strung in the kitchen, and on rainy days flutters about among the plants and flowers in the house. Recently it disappeared and was gone fifteen days, but one morning its hostess heard the familiar tap of the tiny bill on the window pane, and admitted "birdy" and it has since remained with her. The little fellow shows as much jealousy as a spoiled child, and flies to the window with evident demonstrations of displeasure when another humming bird, perhaps its mate, occasionally appears at the outside of the glass.—Lewiston Me., Journal.

The Prince of Wales and His Pets.

Concerning the specimens of wild animals which the prince of Wales has been presenting to the Cromwell Road Museum, it may be interesting to state that his royal highness observes a very wholesome rule in these matters. Many of the domestic pets which endeared themselves by long years of association to the Prince and Princess are carefully stuffed immediately after death, and find a permanent place in a corridor or apartment of the royal residence. In this way there is not a solitary zoological specimen either at Sandringham or in Marlborough House which does not possess some reminiscent value in the eyes of its owner. Anything whose interest is strictly scientific is sent to an appropriate public collection, and in this way the Prince of Wales has, in the course of a long career, become a very considerable donor to the great national museum.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Combination.

The Ideal Sewing Machine, which is now being presented by the Pioneer Press as a combination offer with the Daily, Sunday and Weekly Pioneer Press, and as a premium free for a certain number of subscriptions to the Daily, Sunday or Weekly, is one of the best articles of its kind ever put on the market. It is quite small, weighing about twenty-five pounds, and the table stands a trifle less than three feet in height. It has an adjustable treadle, so that it may be used by adult or child. Although it is intended for plain sewing only, it has the Wilcox & Gibbs stitch and uses the W. & G. needles.

The following offers are extremely liberal: The Daily and Sunday Pioneer Press for one year and the Ideal Sewing Machine, $8.80; the Sunday Pioneer Press for one year and the Ideal Sewing Machine, $5.15; the Weekly Pioneer Press for one year and the Ideal Sewing Machine, $4.85. For three yearly subscriptions to the Daily and Sunday Pioneer Press, remitting $15.00, we will give an Ideal Sewing Machine free. For twenty-one months' subscriptions to the Daily and Sunday Pioneer Press, remitting $11.00, we will give an Ideal Sewing Machine free. For eleven yearly subscriptions to the Weekly Pioneer Press, remitting $11.00, we will give an Ideal Sewing Machine free.

The above offers have never been equaled in the Northwest. The machine is guaranteed to sew perfectly when it leaves the factory. The subscriber pays the freight, which will be between 25 and 50 cents, according to distance. Present subscribers may take advantage of these offers by extending their subscriptions from the date of expiration.

Owing to the enormous demand for these machines created by these offers, it may be a week or ten days before the machine reaches you.

Anarchists in France.

About 2,000 persons in France are marked as anarchists and are constantly watched by the police of the various European countries, of whom 500 are French and 1,500 are foreigners, Italy leading with 500, followed by Switzerland with 300, Germany and Russia with 240 each, Austria and Belgium with 60 each. As regards occupation, shoemakers, carpenters and day laborers of all nations furnish large proportions of the anarchists, while the educated professions hardly appear. German tailors and printers, Swiss watchmakers and farmers, Italian clerks and bakers and French waiters and persons without avowed business tend more to anarchy than those of other nationalities. The Russians differ from all others in that 30 per cent of the persons under surveillance are students, another 30 per cent professional men, and hardly 1 per cent have occupations requiring no education.—Le Figaro.

MANY LIVES LOST.

DETAILS OF THE STORM ALONG THE GULF OF CALIFORNIA.

The City of Culiacan, the Capital of the State of Sinaloa, Is Partially Destroyed and Many of the Inhabitants Are Killed.

San Francisco, Oct. 22.—The story of the terrible storm that recently swept the Gulf of California has only been hinted at in the meager dispatches that have been received from Mexico. The first word picture of the gale in its awful entirety is drawn by Capt. Van Helms, master of the steamship Willamette Valley, who has just arrived from the region devastated by the cyclone. It is now apparent that this whirling wind storm will go down in history as one of the most fearfully destructive ever known. The difficulty in getting news from the wind-swept and water-ruined country has seemed as strange as the storm itself. The cyclone passed over a country remote from connecting lines of railroad, and far away from reliable means of communication. The telegraph wires were all prostrated and many of them will remain down for weeks to come. At Guaymas little or nothing about the storm seemed to be known. Letters received from points within the stricken area were incomplete, full of doubts, uninteresting and mostly written in Spanish and poorly written at that.

These reasons mentioned and others as potent will account for the fact that the world will first learn of the partial destruction of the capital of the State of Sinaloa through Capt. Van Helms nearly three weeks after the cyclone. Other details nearly as important as these have remained for him to describe. The fury of the storm was not most felt at La Paz, as had been supposed, but at the interior plateau town of Culiacan. The storm burst in the mountains back of this important town and the waters worked an awful wreck. Between twenty-five and thirty people were drowned outright and many others were injured in the raging flood that rushed through this city. Culiacan is an historic city. In it are the state buildings of Sinaloa. Back of it are some of the richest silver mines the world has known. It is a town of fully 11,000 people. The Culiacan river runs through it. When the storm struck the ridge of high mountains back of the city there was such a downpour of rain that in an incredibly short time the canyons were full of water pent up by the very quickness with which it fell. After the climax and the fury of the elements was reached, this water descended from canyon to valley and valley to plateau with fierceness never before known in that part of Mexico.

Smuggling Scandal.

St. John's, N. F., Oct. 22.—The government decided to order the arrest of several persons involved in the smuggling exposures of last night, fearing that they would escape, and shortly after midnight four prisoners were taken, one being Michael Tobin, a leading government member of the assembly, and the governor of the Savings bank. Thirteen other warrants are to be executed to-morrow and proceedings against the chief offenders will be taken before the admiralty court, which possesses summary jurisdiction. It is predicted that these arrests will disrupt the Whiteway government, which is evenly divided on the question of public prosecution.

Got the Will Set Aside.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Oct. 22.—Several years ago an old man named Gwin, over seventy years of age, married a young girl at Deadwood named Minnie Clark, aged twenty-two years. He possessed several hundred thousand dollars, and at his death, a year ago, he left his entire fortune to his youthful wife. His children contested the will, claiming that the girl wife had used undue influence with the old man to get him to make the will in her name only. A dispatch from Montana announces that the children have succeeded in getting the will set aside and secured possession of the entire fortune.

The Crew Saved.

Watertown, N. Y., Oct. 22.—It was found to-day that a schooner which went ashore between Campbell's Point and Henderson's Harbor yesterday afternoon is the Mystic Star, from Detroit to Ogdensburg, loaded with iron. The life saving crew at Sandy Creek was not notified until this morning. It was found, however, that the crew of the schooner was safe, having remained in the rigging all night. The hull is completely submerged and she lies in a dangerous position.

There is certainly no baking powder so well known and generally used as the Royal. Its perfect purity, as well as its superiority in leavening power, are matters of fact no longer disputed by honest dealers or makers of other brands. Fertilizing Works Burned.

General Strike of Miners.

Dubois, Pa., Oct. 22.—Great anxiety prevails in the bituminous coal region on account of the strike situation. Labor leaders are not certain that the strike will be general.

A SEVERE DROUTH.

Now Prevails Throughout Almost the Entire Country.

Washington, Oct. 22.—Reports received at the weather bureau indicate that the present drouth is one of the severest, most prolonged and general known in the United States since the bureau's organization. There are a few places which show an exception to the general condition, but in no large section of the country, unless, perhaps, in the Northwest and far West, does there appear to have been a soaking rain for the past two months or more. Where there has been exceptional precipitation it has been confined to small areas. In some parts of the country the drouth began in the latter part of July, but in most of the sections it did not become markedly pronounced until in August.

The entire Atlantic coast, with a few exceptions such as Charleston, S. C., and Augusta, Ga., shows a deficiency below the normal rainfall since Aug. 1 amounting in some instances to almost half of the average precipitation. The Ohio and Mississippi valleys report similar conditions, as does a part of the Pacific coast. The great lake region upon the whole has fared better than other sections of the country east of the Missouri. In some parts of the rocky mountain region as in Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and Nevada there have been excessive rainfalls during this period and along the Pacific coast from Olympia to San Francisco there were good rains in September, as there have been in places since then in that section. Further east, Fort Scott, Ark.; Indianapolis, Ind., and St. Paul, Minn., are the centers of districts where the drouth was broken in September. There have been good rains also in parts of Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas.

The greatest complaints come from West Virginia, Kentucky and Western Pennsylvania. Fortunately in most parts of the country the drouth did not set in until after the principal crops were matured, consequently the effect has not been so disastrous as it would have been if it had begun earlier. In some places it has had a slight effect on the planting of winter wheat, and complaints come from many quarters of the inconvenience of securing water for domestic and stock purposes, many small streams, stock ponds, springs and wells having become dry. Pastures have been injured in many states. It is also noticeable that there has been an increase in typhoid fever over the normal in many of the sections where the drouth is severe.

The official figures for the entire country covering the period from March 1 to Oct. 14 show a deficiency. At Eastport, Me., more than a third of the normal; at New Haven, Conn., almost a third; Albany, N. Y., more than a fourth; Harrisburg, Pa., more than half; Philadelphia, about a fourth; Washington, about a fifth; Norfolk, Va., almost a sixth; Wilmington, N. C., between a fifth and a fourth; Jacksonville, Fla., almost a fourth; Vicksburg, Miss., about two-sevenths; Galveston, Tex., about two-fifths; Knoxville, Tenn., almost a fourth; Louisville, Ky., more than a fourth; Indianapolis, more than a third; Cincinnati, more than two-fifths; with about the same rate at Columbus, Parkersburg, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Toledo and Detroit, and in much of the lake region. The falling off in the upper Mississippi valley and Rocky Mountain states was less marked. The cities which show an excessive rainfall for the entire season are Columbia, S. C.; Atlanta, Augusta and Savannah, Ga.; Pensacola, Fla.; Fort Smith and Little Rock, Ark.; Arkansas City, Mo.; Pierre, S. D.; St. Vincent, N. D.; Miles City, Mont.; Cheyenne, Wyo.; Denver and Pueblo, Colo.; Abilene, Kan.; Astoria, Or.; Eureka and Red Bluff, Cal.

PROTECTION OF THE STATE

Asked of Gov. Clough by Jacob Freund.

St. Paul, Oct. 22.—Jacob Freund, an elderly and wealthy resident of Blue Earth City, Faribault county, has applied to Gov. Clough for police protection. He tells a weird story in a petition to the governor, of alleged persecution at the hands of reputable citizens of Blue Earth City. He goes so far as to claim that they have twice tried to kill him, and failing, have made three attempts to cause not only his death, but that of his family, by setting fire to his home. He asserts that the authorities of Blue Earth City turn a deaf ear to his appeals for protection and, fearing that he will be murdered, he asks Gov. Clough to intercede in his behalf. From the allegations contained in Mr. Freund's petition, it appears that he claims he is being made the victim of a secret organization, composed of twenty-one persons, who, he alleges, have sworn to take his life. Whether or not this is true, it, nevertheless, appears that Mr. Freund's life has been made miserable by systematic persecution ever since last spring. Mr. Freund is being persecuted because, it is alleged, he caused the death of a young woman at Blue Earth City and has since been released on bail and stands a chance of being acquitted of the terrible charge preferred against him.

Thirty People Injured.

New Orleans, Oct. 22.—Great crowds went over the river to see the fire ruins in Algiers, and the mass bore down a pontoon bridge at the ferry landing, about thirty people being injured and three children and a woman are missing.

LONGED FOR THE STAGE.

North Dakota Girl Goes to New York to Become an Actress.

New York, Oct. 22.—Sarah Rugninger, a fourteen-year-old girl from Rugby, N. D., is in custody of officers of the Gerry society here, and will be sent home when her parents can be communicated with. She was found in the Pennsylvania depot at Jersey City, and declared that she had come to New York alone to become an actress. Her father is a Swede and keeps a butcher shop at Rugby.

BANK IS BLOWN UP.

ROBBERS AT ANACONDA, MONT., USE DYNAMITE.

Too Much of the Explosive Is Used an the Vault Is Wrecked and the Books Blown Into the Street, but Robbers Secure No Cash.

Butte, Mont., Oct. 22.—A desperate but unsuccessful attempt was made to rob Hoge, Daly & Co.'s bank at Anaconda early this morning by blowing it up. Two watchmen, Thomas Hammerle and E. L. Kunkle, were sleeping in the bank at the time and were awakened by a noise coming, as they thought, from within the vault. They left the building to investigate, and just as they got on the outside a terrific explosion occurred, shattering the plate glass front and ripping out the whole iron front of the vault and scattering bank books and papers all over the street, but the cash apartment of the vault remained intact.

In a very few minutes the bank was surrounded by police and citizens, and one of the robbers was caught on the roof of the building where he stood as if dazed. The others made their escape. The man caught was identified as A. L. Firpo, a young mechanic who has lived in Anaconda for several years and was well known. He refused to talk or disclose the identity of his assistants, but said he had but one partner in the affair. The robbers had gone to the roof of the bank building, which is only one story high, and cut a hole through the roof and down into the vault. The hole was large enough to admit a man, and must have been the work of many hours, and it is surmised the men have worked at it for a week or more. After reaching the vault they used dynamite, with which they were evidently inexperienced and did not realize its explosive power. The police are certain to catch the other robber before many hours, as they have a good description of him, and they also expect to get a confession out of Firpo.

The bank building is located at the corner of Main street and Commercial avenue, one of the most prominent corners in the city. A few weeks ago the police received an anonymous letter stating that an effort would be made to rob the bank, but no attention was paid to the communication. There were several hundred thousand dollars in the bank at the time of the attempted robbery. The damage to the building amounts to about $2,000.

Firpo was placed in a sweat box and confessed the whole affair, and upon his confession Will H. Darling, a young blacksmith, was arrested as an accomplice, and the police are looking for another man.

Pure baking powders are one of the chief aids to the cook in preparing perfect and wholesome food. While those are to be obtained of well-established reputation, like the Royal, of whose purity there has never been a question, it is proper to avoid all others.

BURGLARS AND FIRE BUGS.

Functions of the Two Classes Combined at Madison, S. D.

Madison, S. D., Oct. 22.—The postoffice here was entered by burglars early this morning and the safe blown open, $215 being taken from the money drawer. Three registered letters, the money order vouchers for the week and other office documents are missing. Some valuable private papers belonging to the postmaster, deposited in the safe over night, were taken. Fire was set by the burglars and a considerable amount of loose papers and old reports were burned and the fire was just discovered in time to avoid a conflagration. A quantity of postage stamps mutilated by the fire and water were found. The robbers were evidently after money only. There is no clue to the robbers, who appear to have been experts, but it is thought they are not far away.

GALE ON LAKE PEPIN.

Considerable Lumber Lost and a Reed's Landing Man Drowned.

Lake City, Minn., Oct. 22.—During the heavy gale last evening three rafts of logs and lumber, towed by the steamers Ravenna, Clyde and Graves of Stillwater, were broken up in Lake Pepin, about four miles below here, and the lumber distributed through the lake. But little of the lumber can be recovered, and the loss has been approximated at $15,000. Lewis Moore of Reed's Landing was drowned last night while attempting to recover drifting logs from the river at that point. He was thirty years of age and leaves a wife and two children.

Victim of a Conspiracy.

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 22.—Rev. G. W. Hoeffer, the Republican nominee for representative in Darkey county, has issued a lengthy statement in regard to the letter in which he offered to vote for any one whom the Democratic state committee might name for United States senator if he were furnished $1,500 to use in his election. Hoeffer admits the signature is genuine, but claims the body of the letter is a forgery. He says he is the victim of a conspiracy hatched by a Bible agent named Fuller in whom he placed unlimited confidence.

Hastings, Minn., Oct. 22.—The commissioners to locate the fourth insane hospital, consisting of O. C. Merriman of Minneapolis, S. G. Smith of St. Paul, Alvah Eastman of St. Cloud, J. H. Block of St. Peter, C. E. Bondy of Eyota, A. J. Carlson of East Union and Henry Hooper of Stephen, were in the city looking over the proposed sites. They were received by Mayor George Parker and prominent citizens and taken out in carriages, dining at the Gardner.

A Lord in Exile.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., Oct. 22.—Lord Alfred Douglas, the son of the marquis of Queensberry, is stopping at the Cataract house and is "doing the falls." He has been journeying in the United States ever since the Wilde scandal came out, and says he will not go back to England for five years. He has his wife with him.

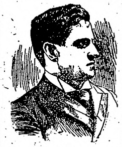
Mining Town Burned.

Hazelton, Pa., Oct. 22.—The mining village of Stockton was practically wiped out by fire last night.

TILLMAN A TALKER.

The South Carolinan Will Probably Stir Up the Senate.

Washington, Oct. 22.—It is believed that a stirring experience is in store for the United States senate when Benjamin Ryan Tillman speaks on its floor. Gov. Tillman, who served South Carolina in congress from 1878 to 1890, and since that time has been governor of the state, is one of the most remarkable leaders in the South. He enters the United States senate next December. He has been the absolute ruler of South Carolina, and it is said of him that he has humbled the cities, exalted agrarians and destroyed the saloon power. He is now at the head of a movement to disfranchise negroes in the state. Gov. Tillman was born in South Carolina forty-eight years ago. He is self-educated and a natural dictator. Until 1878 he took no part in politics.



B. R. Tillman.

ORGIES IN A CHURCH.

An Important Witness in the Durrant Case Is Found.

San Francisco, Oct. 22.—The prosecution in the trial of W. H. T. Durrant has found a witness who will testify that everything was not right in Emanuel church prior to the murder of Blanche Lamont and Minnie Williams. This witness is a colored bootblack named Budd Wilson. Last night when he was served with a subpoena he told his story to Detective Seymour.

"I know King and Durrant so well that they talked freely with me," said he. "At first I was surprised that such religious young men should be carrying on in such a fashion, but after awhile I concluded they were about the same as other young men. I learned from those two boys themselves that they were taking girls to the church every night. I often heard them tell of the fun they had there, and of the different girls who accompanied them. I know myself of five girls who used to go to the church at night with these boys. The people in the mission would be very much surprised if they knew who the girls were. They all belong to respectable families, and the worst of it all is that their parents never dreamed that such things were going on."

This company claims to have the most complete statistics on consumption in the world, and that these risks are good, providing the patients take a course of the Amick treatment.

It is estimated that 700 persons are rendered homeless. All the records of the fifth district were consumed in the court house. Loss, $150,000.

The Bicycle in Future Wars.

Military authorities have come to the conclusion that the bicycle will play an indispensable part in the wars of the future. Its sphere, at least in its early military stages, will be that of the uhlan of the 1870 war. The cyclist, in preliminary operations, will act as an impenetrable advance cloud or screen for the army, pushing far ahead into the enemy's theater of operations, making his power felt long before the enemies have a chance to come together, paralyzing the enemy's communications, making descents now here, now there, often rashly and often making mistakes. In spite of this, he will always be able to obtain information for headquarters better than any other form of scouting, feeling the enemy retiring before him when outnumbered, but contesting the ground whenever there is a chance for a contest. He will, in fact, pursue exactly the course followed by the Prussian cavalry in the early days of the Franco-Prussian war; always acting in company with light horse artillery, with the gunners mounted on bicycles, and not according to the present out-of-date system, on caissons. With these and the flying cyclists, it is believed that the modern army has an offensive combination such as has never been equaled. The cyclist will be a crack shot with the rifle, and that will be his only weapon. He has one decided advantage over the cavalryman, in that he is not bothered by the question of forage. On poor roads and in poor weather the cavalryman has everything in his favor, and this will make the conservative soldier view the bicycle with suspicion. Against this radical disadvantage is placed the fact that under moderately fair condition the cyclist can outmarch the cavalryman two to one, or 100 per cent, and under almost the worst conditions he can do the same with infantry. Another important duty the cyclist may have to perform in the next war is to act as the anvil for the main army to hammer the enemy against, to reach the enemy's rear, to get on his communications, take up a defensive position and wait for his attack. This could only be practicable with a heavy force of artillery. The value of the cyclist as a messenger or in guarding trains and supplies is obvious.

A Talk Meter Wanted.

The man who wishes to take a short-cut to fame and fortune has now the chance of his life before him. The crying need in the telephone business is a talk meter, an automatic arrangement by which language can be measured off and recorded in specific lengths. The telephone exchange people say that the garrulity of some of their subscribers is appalling, and that the trouble is not confined to one sex. The sound of their voices in the telephone transmitter has for some people a great fascination, and they will be ringing up "central" all day if they can find the most trivial pretext. The telephone companies say that in this way a large amount of work is unduly thrown on the exchange employes. They hold that the fault is with the system, and that if the people could be made to pay according to the number and length of their calls they would make more temperate and legitimate use of the instrument. Philadelphia is approaching the idea. The Bell Telephone company there gives what is called a measured service, the "measurement" being determined by the number of calls or connections, each five minutes' conversation or fraction thereof being counted as a call. This gives subscribers rates in proportion to the use of their instruments. Some such method as this will have to come into general use if the abuse of the telephone is to be arrested. Seven hundred and fifty million telephone messages were sent over the wires last year, averaging about ten messages to every man, woman and child in the United States. Telegrams never exceeded one per head per year.

A Reputed Remedy for Hay Fever.

Martyrs to hay fever will learn with interest the experience of Dr. Fuber of Hamburg who suffered a great deal from hay fever during several summers. He noticed that in winter a coryza was accompanied with hot ears, which regained their normal temperature when the discharge from the nose was established. He tried a reverse order of things on the hay fever and rubbed his ears until they became red hot. He can now lead an endurable existence. As soon as there is the least amount of fullness in the nose, the ears are noticeably pale. A thorough rubbing of the ears has always succeeded in freeing the nasal mucous membrane from congestion. The rubbing must be thorough and repeated.

Combined Brake and Bell for Trolley Cars.

An electrical engineer, who has just returned from Germany, speaks of the attractive appearance presented by the street cars in Dresden, which is largely due to the fine dark colors in which they are painted. Many of the cars are American; but there is room for plenty more, and American manufacturers who desire to push business in Dresden are advised to correspond entirely in the German language. The Dresden car drivers use a peculiar bell for warning pedestrians. The bell is fixed on the top of the level handle, and even while braking, the motorman can sound the alarm by simply raising and lowering the tube on the brake handle.

The Truly Brave.

Do you start, tremble and turn pale when confronted with an unexpected danger? Are you ashamed of this and do you call yourself a coward for the weakness? You are no coward unless you shirked a duty. The Duke of Wellington once saw a soldier tremble and turn pale as his regiment passed to the front to charge a battery. "That is a brave man," said he. "He knows the danger and he faces it."

Few people know, or would realize if they did says an exchange the vast volume of copy that has to be raked up by the editor of a paper, even if a very poor one. Every year that unfortunate individual writes enough so that if put in a book form it would make a respectable library, This would be all right if the editor above said were a genius, which is seldom the case, consequently readers should be indulgent if every line of every page is not a literary gem, sparkling with wit and humor or pathos, as the case may be. It is hard enough to get up the required amount in any shape, laying aside the question of literary polish. The labors of Hercules were summer picnics by comparison.

Very few lazy men make good advertisers. It takes time thought and labor to write a good advertisement. A barber; whose wife conducted a small laundry wrote with a lead pencil on a piece of paper the words "quilts cleaned," This he placed on the wall of his shop, but it did not attract attention. The barber concluded that advertising did not pay, A tramp wanted to exchange a neat sign for a hair cut and a shave, and a trade was made. He was an artist and put in neat colors the following on a large pasteboard:" Quilts cleaned while you sleep: Clothes dyed while you live' Hair cut while you wait" and Free shine with "every shave." The sign was swung, and the papers incidently mentioned it as a news item. A month later that barber was making regular bank deposits, but before it was with difficulty he could pay house rent'—Press and Printer,

Gambetta and Napoleon's Portrait.

In connection with the anniversary of the proclamation of the third republic a Paris contemporary tells the following story: When Gambetta, accompanied by Jules Favre, arrived in the hall of the Hotel de Ville, where he was officially to read the proclamation, the crowd which followed the two deputies caught sight of a fine portrait of Napleon III hanging on a wall. They promptly took it down and were about to smash it to pieces when Gambetta intervened. Turning the portrait to the wall, he said: "My friends, we have put up with the original for 20 years. Let us be content today to turn his face to the wall. It is all he deserves."—London News.

We print a likeness of the skeleton of this remarkable paleontological reptile because some of its physical characteristics are synonymous with our business methods. Perhaps the most striking similarity may be found in its

Its little finger is very large: and so are our bargains. The paradox of a little finger being big may be likened to the paradoxical inducements we offer you.

Profits and Hind Feet Small

Its hind feet are out of all proportion to its fore feet, just as our profit is overshadowed by the buyer's. Its large head represents the size of our stock. The many years that have elapsed since the time when this creature flourished will hint at the wearing quality of our goods.

THE FIRST ATTACK.

Oh, there's something the matter with Teddy!
Some great weight on the mind of the lad.
Some sore trouble he's not told "the mater,"
Not yet brought to the ear of his "dad."
Such a change has come over our laddie!
He has lost all his ardor for noise,
And he waxes sardonic when sought out
To "have fun" with the neighborhood boys.

He just mopes by himself. If he whistles,
'Tis some tune in a sad minor key;
If he speaks, it is not to the question.
The brave boy, once so frank and so free,
Grows secretive and dumb as an oyster.
Oh, some trouble or other he's got
Hidden now in his heart's deep recesses,
Though 'twould puzzle the lad to tell what!

Though it needs no M. D.'s diagnosing
To explain this condition of his—
His strange sadness, his silence, his tremors—
He himself doesn't know what it is,
Though his elders (expert at detecting
All the signs and the symptoms thereof)
Could have told him—the boy's never dreamed yet,
Poor dear lamb, that it's nothing but love!

All he knows is that—though he once wondered
What his big brother Billy could see
In girls, silly things, to distract him
From his baseball and mumblepeg—he
Blushes red when one little maid speaks now,
Grows first hot and then cold if her curls
Brush his cheek, and he wonders no longer
Why his big brother Billy likes girls!

Those Who Do or Who Do Not Read.

There are people to whom it comes natural to read, and there are others, even in these days of newspapers and schools, to whom reading comes hard. I have seen, as most of us have, so many thoroughly worthless persons who were great readers that when I meet a thoroughly worthy and intelligent person who doesn't read it fills me with admiration and respect. I do meet such persons now and then. They are apt to be quick and accurate observers, good talkers, people of action. Of course they do read a little something every day, the newspaper if nothing more, but reading is not a necessity to them They don't count on it as an amusement or depend upon it as an exercise of the mind.

To the habitual reader reading becomes as necessary as alcohol to the dram drinker. It doesn't seem to make any violent amount of difference what he reads, but he must sit in a chair a certain length of time every day and rest his eyes and mind on a printed page. You can no more judge such a person by the book company he keeps than you can judge a lunatic by the qualities of his keepers. His reading is habit. It never turns to energy, never influences action. He sleeps better after it, that is all.—Scribner's.

Italian Peasants.

Ouida deplores the fact that in her beloved Italy the peasants do not sing as of yore. Twenty years ago in Italy, she says, melody was to be heard all over the country. The laborer going home to bed through the vines sung his stornello or his rispetto to the sleeping fields. The boy who drove his yoked oxen or cows in the big square cart beguiled the way with song, joyous or amorous. The guitar and the mandolin were heard at dusk at every farmhouse door, and in the streets of the town youths went singing and playing until the moon was high. There was music all over the land, along the hedgerows as in the city lanes, under the poplars and mulberries as beneath the walls of citadel and baptistery. How many a time at sunset or in the starlight have I listened to the beautiful canzone of the peasantry when the sweetness of the vine flower filled the atmosphere or the drooped acacia blossom shed its smell on garden paths. Now rarely are these wood notes wild ever heard to lighten and spiritualize toil.

Arithmetic Applied to Dramatic Criticism.

Howard Paul tells a story which has Henry Irving for its subject. One night at the London Lyceum two American women sat behind Mr. Paul in the stalls. The play was "Romeo and Juliet," Irving playing the lovesick Montague and Ellen Terry representing the fair Capulet.

The balcony scene was reached, and Irving was sighing and groaning under the balcony, while Miss Terry looked down upon him with her glowing but scarcely maiden eyes.

"How old is Mr. Irving?" asked one of the women.

"About 50," the other answered.

"And how old is Miss Terry?"

"Somewhat near 40."

"Hum! Fifty and forty make ninety. Well, I think they're old enough to know better."—Life's Calendar.

A Lesson In Pronunciation.

London Truth is responsible for this story: A bishop of St. David's confided to an old Welsh clergyman his difficulty in mastering the Welsh double l. The parson replied, "Put the tip of your apostolic tongue in the roof of your episcopal mouth, my lord, and then hiss like a gander."

All buildings in the city of Glasgow are furnished with water by the municipality at cheap rates, and there is always plenty of it. It is brought from Loch Katrine and is of the best and purest quality.

HE SLEW CHIEF TECUMSEH.

Richard M. Johnson of Kentucky the Hero of the Fight.

While nearly every one has heard of the famous Indian leader Tecumseh, there are many who are not aware of the fact that his death was due to the bravery of a man who afterward became the vice president of the United States. Richard M. Johnson was a native of the Blue Grass State and the fact may account for his fondness for a fight. He was born in 1780 while Washington was still alive and when the American states had scarcely passed out of their swaddling clothes into the dress of full fledged and independent sovereignties. The white man ruled only in the east, and out on the vast prairies of the west roamed the Indians, and the settlers on the outskirts of civilization never knew at what moment they might be attacked and destroyed.

Such continued to be the state of affairs for some years, and when Johnson was in congress in 1812, and the English and Indians had combined to attack the new republic, Johnson went home to Kentucky and raised a battalion of three companies, and after they had been consolidated into a regiment was made the colonel and served for ten months. He returned for a short space to his congressional duties, but at the command of the secretary of war soon raised a regiment of a thousand volunteers and went to attack the enemy in the west, joining his force to that of General William Henry Harrison, who was then governor of Indiana and the leader of the American troops. It was then, on Oct. 5, 1813, occurred the famous battle of the Thames.

The English forces were posted between the river and the marsh, while the Indians were on a high ground in the swampy land. Colonel Johnson ordered his men forward, and the English let them get almost within a few yards before the command to fire was given. Then the bullets laid the front rank low. A desperate battle took place, but the conflict lasted only about 15 minutes, the Americans being victorious. Tecumseh was found on the field dead, and it was asserted that Johnson was the one who shot him, as he was killed by a man on horseback, and Johnson was the only one mounted, his command being infantry. It was also known that Johnson had been engaged in a hand to hand fight with one of the most desperate of the chiefs, and it was thought that Tecumseh would be the very one to single out the leader to meet his tomahawk, a foe worthy of his steel. Johnson himself was badly wounded.

Although the death of Tecumseh at the hands of Johnson has been a much disputed point, he has always been given the credit, and in elections it was something which largely added to his popularity—nothing strange in an age when the statesmen were required to fight on the frontier of a new world.

When Johnson returned to congress, he was still too sick to walk, and his way up the street was a triumphal procession, while a joint resolution of thanks was passed by the body. Afterward he came to the senate, and then he was chosen a vice president on the ticket headed by Martin Van Buren. No election was made by the electoral college. Thus failing in an election by this means, Johnson was chosen by the senate to that high position.—Philadelphia Times.

Lizard Captured by a Spider.

The giant of the whole spider family is the "hound" or "dog spider" of Madagascar. Its body weighs almost a pound and each of his eight legs is longer and larger in diameter than the common cedar pencil. Each of its mandibles is three-fourths of an inch in length and very strong. The dog spider does not spread a net and lie in wait for its prey, as do the gigantic bird spiders of Ceylon, but "follows the trail" in exact imitation of a hound. It will follow a faint scent to and fro through the weeds and underbrush until the course is ascertained and then suddenly dart off in a bee line and quickly overtake the lizard, rat, mole or other animal of which it is in pursuit. It has been known to capture and kill lizards a foot or more in length, and Professor Barnaby tells of one which pounced upon and killed a full grown rat.

The dog spider is said to be the only variety among the larger species of spiders which is absolutely nonvenomous, there being no more danger in its bite than there is in that of a squirrel or a rabbit.—St. Louis Republic.

Discretion the Better Part.

How to Use a Veil.

See a Frenchwoman come into a restaurant. No matter how tight her corsage is she raises first one hand and then the other, and by a few deft touches her veil is off.

When she wants it on again, she gets it back in place in the same magical way. On the contrary, an American or an English woman, under the circumstances, has to drop all interest in the conversation in order to wrestle with her veil, and perhaps even has to have assistance before she accomplishes her purpose.

To wear a veil rightly is an art, but no degree of art can render one of these bordered atrocities becoming, and women will continue to buy them because they are something new.

"How do you like that?" asked a woman as a young girl entered the car wearing a black mottled looking veil with her sailor hat.

"A great mistake," decided a judge of veils, after one glance. "That kind of veil makes a woman's face look blistered, or else it has the appearance of being worn to hide pimples or blotches.

"A girl as young as that ought not to wear a veil at all, or if she likes the feeling of privacy which a veil gives—and I always feel a kind of protection when I have my veil on—let her select some soft, plain mesh, not a net all flourished over like that."

Like a Venomous Serpent
Hidden in the grass, malaria but waits our approach, to spring at and fasten its fangs upon us. There is, however, a certain antidote to its venom which renders it powerless for evil. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is this acknowledged and world-famed specific, and it is, besides this, a thorough curative for rheumatism, dyspepsia, liver complaint, constipation, la grippe and nervousness. In convalescence and age it is very serviceable.

Proof of the Love.

"Are you sure you love him?"

"Am I sure? Do you see this dress?"

"Of course I do. What of it?"

"Will you kindly tell me if it bears the slightest resemblance to the present fashion?"

"Well, really, it—er—it——"

"It doesn't?"

"No."

"Well, I'm wearing it because he likes it."

Back in Noah's Time.

"Are all the animals in?" asked Noah, taking another look at the barometer.

"All but the leopards," replied Ham, "and I think we have a pair of them spotted."

Noah shook his head gloomily and muttered something about "that boy coming to a bad end."—Cincinnati Tribune.

A Gleam of Intelligence.

"I thought you said this horse you sold me was an inteligent reliable animal."

"It is."

"Why, it tries to get over the fence every time it sees a girl in bloomers."

"Yes. That's what shows its intelligence."—Washington Star.

A 200-FOOT PUDDING.

It Was Built on Savage Island in the Village of Liku.

I had been ten years on Savage Island and meant to come to England on a visit, but before leaving went to each village to say "good-by," to the people. We had been three weeks from home when we got to a little village called Liku. The evening after our arrival there was a terrible commotion—men, women and children were running about—some carrying sticks, some logs of wood and some big stones. The men began digging a long, shallow trench with their sharp-pointed sticks. The boys brought big stones and firewood. These were piled up all along one side of the trench. The wood was then set fire to, and was soon blazing, while the stones on the top were getting hot. While the fire was burning one side, little bundles of something white and soft were being undone from the clean leaves that contained them. This was the paste out of which the pudding was to be made.

There were no flour, suet, eggs, milk, plums or currants in it. It was the paste of a native vegetable called taro, and old cocoanut, both grated very fine and mixed together. A long pudding cloth was laid along the side of the trench, and in it the pudding was carefully wrapped. It was not calico or linen, but nice clean banana leaves. Over this long cocoanut leaves were plaited. When the stones were hot enough, some were quickly laid along the bottom of the trench, then the long pudding laid on top of them, and then some more stones at the sides, and on the top. Some girls had brought heaps of leaves to lay over the top, to keep the heat and steam in, and the earth which had been dug out of the trench was thrown over the top. The cooks and pudding-makers all went to sleep, and left the stars to watch their cookery. Next morning at 8 the whole village was astir, men, women and children, all in holiday attire.

It was soon uncovered and was found to be well done. Long poles were brought and laid the whole length. These were fastened to the pudding by small vines, canes, etc. It was then rolled out of the trench on one side; short sticks were made fast crosswise to the poles and all was ready for taking up. About 100 men and boys then raised it on their shoulders, and, with one tremendous shout, started toward my house, accompanied by the whole village. I measured it before carving and found it was 200 feet long—2 feet longer than the Monument of London is high. It measured 13 inches in circumference. It was soon carved into pieces 4 yards long, and these were distributed all over the land; men carrying as much pudding as their strength would allow to distant villages.—Spokane Review.

IN AN ARIZONA SHOW.

The Ostrich Swallowed a Lighted Cigar and There Was Trouble.

There was a performance in the ostrich department of the syndicate shows yesterday which had not been advertised. It took the place of the strong-man feature which was advertised, but didn't come off. Sammie Hughes was standing near the ostrich conservatory, making a scientific study of the birds and smoking a freshly lighted 10-cent cigar. An ostrich suddenly lengthened his neck about a foot and removed the cigar from Mr. Hughes' mouth and swallowed it, fire and all. The length of an ostrich's neck furnishes a wonderful opportunity for a lighted cigar, and it burned every inch of the way as it went down. The ostrich acted as if he regretted having given way to the prompting of his indiscriminate appetite. A gentleman connected with the show in the capacity of chambermaid for the ostriches saw the cigar disappear within the bird's bill. He accused Mr. Hughes of having made a voluntary contribution and uttered language which was neither moral nor polite, showing that the spiritual training of this great educational menagerie is not what it is cracked up to be. He threatened to eject Mr. Hughes from the premises. Mr. Hughes tried to explain that he was the chief loser by the transaction, and that the whole thing was an affair between himself and the ostrich. Deputy United States Marshal Ezekiel also began to say that the ostrich had brought the trouble on himself. The showman pushed Mr. Ezekiel aside, and the officer was compelled to exhibit his gun as his badge of authority. In the meantime the cigar had been extinguished in the bird's gizzard, and he seemed to have forgotten the episode of the cigar and was looking longingly at an empty soda-water bottle which lay on the ground just out of reach.—Tucson Star.

Made Famous by a Grape.

Ephriam W. Bull, who became famous as the originator of the Concord grape, has just died at his home in Concord, Mass. He was born March 4, 1806. The last two years he had been in the home for the aged. He originated the Concord grape about 1849. He was a member of the senate, member of the Social Circle, and a very prominent Mason. He was a past master of Corinthian Masonic lodge of Concord. He was a man of very strong will, great thought, well read and versed in history. He was a member of the board of agriculture ten years, and was at one time a selectman. He desired to live until he could see his new grapes on the market. Some of the large New York vineyards are cutting from them now. One of these grapes he called Rockwood, after Judge Hoar; another the Esther, for his mother.

A Divided Jury.

A man was on trial in Lake county recently on a charge of grand larceny. He was accused of stealing a hog. An old rancher whose interest in the case was due to the fact that he owned a big drove of hogs listened attentively to the impaneling of the jury and then left the court room with undisguised disgust.

"What's the matter, Sam?" inquired an attorney.

"That jury's goin' to disagree," he declared emphatically.

"What makes you think so?"

"Think? I don't think nothing about it. I know it."

"Well, then, how do you know it?"

"Why, they've got six hog men that raise hogs and four men that I knows has stole hogs on that jury, an' nobody ever knowed a hog raiser an' a hog thief as would agree on a hog case."—San Francisco Post.

DIN OF BATTLE WASN'T IN IT.

Great Excitement Coming in the Very Near Future.

It was a critical moment! The enemy had charged the right flank and scattered it to the winds. Dynamite bombs fell like rain from the airships above. The four leading generals of the Reds were lying face down on the field dead. It looked as if the Blues were going to win the day with untold defeat. They rushed in solid ranks upon the ramparts, and though mowed down in tens of thousands, still they persisted. The guns beyond the fortress were white hot with rapid firing, and their ammunition was momentarily growing scarcer.

On and on the Blues advanced, undismayed, confident of victory. On and on they clambered over their dead comrades mountain high. They heard the roar of the guns growing fainter and fainter. They saw the inevitable downfall of the fortress if they persisted. On they plunged, heeding nothing. The volleys from the guns now killed but a handful compared to the devastation they had wrought all day long, and it was plain that the Reds were reduced to the very last extremities of battle.

Suddenly the guns ceased firing. Their ammunition had given out.

"Up, guards, and at 'em!" shrieked the general in command. "Victory is ours!" Forty thousand men advanced. It was all that was left of the two million brave soldiers who had gone into the battle that morning. On they swept like mad. They were almost upon the ramparts when—

Good heavens! what was that which caused those forty thousand men to stop short, stand trembling there one hard and terrible moment, and then turn on their heels and fly in dismay? Oh, heavens! what was that more deadly than the roar of cannons, more devastating than shot and shell, more death-dealing than dynamite?

See! on the ramparts stand in a solid phalanx one hundred college men, all waving their colors, and each splitting the air with his favorite college yell.

Earthquakes aren't in it. The imperial guard breaks and retreats in mad dismay.

The Napoleon of the future is routed.—New York World.

She Was Cautious.

Here is an example of woman as a diplomatist. Mrs. A. had gone away from home for a day's visit. During her absence her fellow townswoman, Mrs. B., decided, after the pleasant, rural, self-inviting fashion, that she would spend the night with Mrs. A. In spite of Mrs. A.'s absence the thing was easy to accomplish, for the latch-keys of the two houses were alike. Mrs. B. therefore effected an entrance and found the house deserted. "Oh, well, I'll just wait till Mrs. A. gets home," she said to herself. Night came. Still no Mrs. A. "I won't light a lamp," philosophized Mrs. B., "because seeing a light in the house might scare Mrs. A. clear out of her senses." So the unexpected guest sat in the dark awaiting the arrival of her hostess. At last the rattle of Mrs. A.'s key was heard in the door latch. She entered the house and slowly made her way to the "sitting room," of course unconscious that there was another human being within breathing range. "Don't be frightened, Mrs. A.," suddenly spoke a voice from the darkness. "It's only I, Mrs. B. I didn't light a lamp for fear you'd be scared, you know, and—" But the diplomatic Mrs. B. never finished her sentence, for just here Mrs. A. fell on the floor in a dead faint. "It was queer she should have been so scared," said Mrs. B. afterward, "for I took every precaution not to frighten her."—New York Sun.

Germany's War Dogs.

The Gardejager Pachmann and Horch, who took two German war dogs to Constantinople the Saturday before Whitsuntide, have returned to Potsdam. The two dogs, when they arrived at Constantinople, had several days' rest before they were shown to the sultan. His majesty and his officers were so much surprised at the clever and useful performances of the dogs that the German Jäger were begged to give some Turkish soldiers instruction in the training of such dogs. This was done for several days, after which the sultan gave the German soldiers each a decoration and 1,000 francs and caused them to be shown the city and its surroundings. The two war dogs were a present to the sultan from the German emperor.—London Daily News.

ANDRE'S EXECUTION.

The Story of His Death as Told by the English To-Day.

There are few monuments in Westminster Abbey which have attracted more attention than that which commemorates the sad fate of Maj. Andre. Perhaps no event of the American revolution made more aching hearts on both sides of the Atlantic. Great Britain lost two armies, and thousands of her brave soldiers were slain upon the field of battle, but it may be doubted if so many tears were shed for them all as for the young soldier who died upon the gallows.

John Andre was born in London, the son of a Genevese merchant, in 1751. He was sent to Geneva to be educated, but returned to London at the age of eighteen, and, his talents having introduced him to a literary coterie, he became enamored of Miss Honora Sneyd, a young lady of singular beauty and accomplishments. As both were very young the marriage was postponed, and Andre was induced to engage in trade. But he was ambitious, and at the age of twenty entered the army. At the outbreak of the American war he was sent to Canada and taken prisoner at St. John's, but, being exchanged, he became the favorite of that gay and gallant officer, Gen. Sir Henry Clinton, who appointed him his aid-de-camp, and soon his adjutant general.

Young, handsome, clever, full of taste and gayety, an artist and a poet, he was the life of the army, and the little viceregal court that was assembled around its chief. The British occupied American cities, and while the troops of Washington were naked and starving at Valley Forge, Sir Henry was holding a series of magnificent revels at Philadelphia, which were planned and presided over by the gallant Maj. Andre. Philadelphia was evacuated; Sir Henry returned to New York, and Maj. Andre, who had known the wife of the American Gen. Arnold, in Philadelphia, entered into a correspondence with him, and was the agent through whom the British general bargained, under promise of a large reward, for the surrender at West Point, the key of the highlands of the River Hudson.

Andre visited Arnold within the American lines to carry out this treachery; he was captured on his return by three American farmers, who refused his bribes; the papers proclaiming Arnold's treason were found upon him, and by his own frank confession he was convicted as a spy and sentenced to be hanged. Arnold, by the blunder of an American officer, got warning and escaped on board the Vulture. Sir Henry Clinton, by the most urgent representations to Gen. Washington, tried to save his favorite adjutant, but in vain. There was but one way—the surrender of Arnold, to meet the fate decreed to Andre. That was impossible, and the young adjutant, then in his twenty-ninth year, after a vain appeal to Washington that he might die a soldier's death, was hanged on the west bank of the Hudson, almost in sight of the city held by the British army, Oct. 2, 1780.

If his life had been undistinguished he died with heroic firmness. The whole British army went into mourning, and, after the close of the war, his body was deposited near his monument in Westminster Abbey. Even in America, where the name Arnold is a synonym of treason, the sad fate of Maj. Andre excited, and still excites, universal commiseration.—London Spare Moments.

Tale of a Boy and a Cigarette.

The venerable and familiar moral tale of the bad little boy who offered the circus elephant a chew of tobacco is far surpassed in ethical force by the new and strictly truthful story of eleven-year-old Harry Manning of Waltham, Mass. Harry has been learning to smoke cigarettes, and one afternoon about a fortnight ago he was sitting on a barrel behind Northrup's grocery practicing, when he heard footsteps. Not caring to smoke in company, he politely dropped his lighted cigarette into the bung-hole of the barrel on which he sat. The statement is that when the moral elephant in the other story received the chew of tobacco he seized Tommy, the evil-doer, by the coat collar with the thumb and finger of his trunk and threw him harshly out through the roof of the circus tent. The event in Harry's case was still more precipitous and surprising. The barrel he sat on contained naphtha, and rejected the lighted cigarette with an instantaneous burst of emotion which sundered its hoops and gave Harry all the symptoms experienced by the boy who stood on the burning deck whence all but he had fled. Happily, Harry came down in the same township in which he went up, and was identified and is still living with his parents, but another time he will drop his nose into an empty barrel before he drops his cigarette into it.—Harper's Weekly.

One of the Wonders of Physics.

An experienced mechanic who was asked what he regarded as the most wonderful thing for general utility, replied: "The tracking of a car wheel is the most wonderful thing to me in the whole range of science and invention. Here are two rails, up hill and down hill, around the sharp curves and along false tangents and upon them flies at more than a mile a minute, without jar or jostle, a dozen heavy cars drawn by an engine weighing sixty tons. Passengers realize no danger, yet there is only the little flange of a wheel between them and eternity. An inch and a half of steel turned up on the inner side of the wheel holds up the whole train as securely to the rails as if it were bolted there in grooves."—Albany Express.

An Autumn Tragedy.

Her eyes were downcast as she spoke.

"No, Mr. Skimpton," she said, "the dream is over. I can never be your wife."

"Spare me this cruel blow," he said, in a choking voice. "I thought you loved me."

"I did love you," she went on, without raising her eyes. "Perhaps I love you yet. But I can never, never wed a man who tries to black his russet shoes."—Washington Star.

A Commonplace Life.

The trouble is with you, my dear girl, that you count little things as of no worth. Where we have one great renunciation to make we have a thousand little ones, and life, which you are inclined to call commonplace, is not so, for every day can be made rich in beautiful deeds. God, who is just, is merciful, and when temptation comes to you, even if you fail, He remembers that you tried to do what was right, and so is tender in his thought of you. There is not one of us who achieves, even for one day, what we long to. But, my dear, we can always try for it. We can be ready for the trouble that is before us and equip ourselves by prayer and good thoughts so that we can meet it bravely, and, possibly, overcome it. Of course, that is what we wish to do, and yet if we are not strong enough, if we fail by the wayside, we must get up and try again, and keep on trying. That, in itself, will give us strength. And as the years go on and youth belongs to the past, it will always, because of this trying, be easier to do that which is right and merit "that peace which passeth all understanding."—Ruth Ashmore in Ladies' Home Journal.

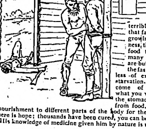
LIBERATED!

An Indian's love, when it once exists, is unparalleled. He would go through fire and water to give a friend freedom. Not necessarily personal liberty, but an emancipation from the slavery of pain. Are you a dyspeptic? Do you realize that that terrible gnawing at your vitals, that faint feeling, that continual growing weaker, that nervousness, that everlasting longing for food that never satisfies, and many other similar symptoms, are but the distant foot steps of the fast approaching, most relentless of executioners—death from starvation. That's actually the outcome of dyspepsia—death (eat what you will), from an inability of the stomach to absorb nourishment from food, or of the blood to convey such nourishment to different parts of the body for the replenishment of tissue. But there is hope; thousands have been cured, you can be. Look to the Indian for aid. His knowledge of medicine given him by nature is unprecedented.

Kickapoo Indian Sagwa,

Nature's own remedy, simple, harmless, but effective, always cures all stomach troubles. It purifies the blood, restores a healthy action to the stomach, liver and kidneys, and by invigorating these great organs the suffering Dyspeptic is brought back from a life of misery to the sunshine of strength and renewed life. Don't hesitate, avail yourself of this last chance while there's yet time. Your druggist has this wonderful preparation. Take no substitute. A good result is assured, and its price, the price of health and happiness is within the reach of all, $1.00 a bottle; 6 bottles for $5.00.



Pretty and Puzzling.

Whilst on a visit to a friend's house a short time ago my attention was attracted to a very pretty ornament, which my friend said he had made himself. It simply consists of taking a glass or goblet, and placing in the interior a little common salt and water. In a day or two a slight mist will be seen upon the glass, which will gradually increase, until in a very short time the glass will present a very beautiful appearance, being enlarged twice its thickness and covered with beautiful salt crystals, packed one upon another. A dish should be placed beneath the glass, as the crystals will run over. The color of the crystals may be changed by adding to the salt and water a little red ink or a spoonful of blueing.—New Orleans Picayune.

The Broom Should Hang.

Some of the daintiest housekeepers neglect to enforce the rule that a brush or broom should never be stood brush part down on the floor, where the straws or hair gather dust or dampness. Every one of these articles should hang from its own hook, and, as this is apt to bring the soiled part against the wall, it is well to stretch a breadth of muslin or calico along the wall from the floor up, so that even the washboard is protected from stain; the muslin, of course, is washed whenever necessary. As all brooms and brushes are not provided with "hangers," a Yankee woman has invented a contrivance which can be fitted to any handle. It is a wire loop with a string attached, and when the string once grips the handle the loop is ready for use. The invention costs but a few cents and is of real value in hanging troublesome whisk brooms, brushes, umbrellas and the various impediments which were born to be hung.—Philadelphia Ledger.

SHOT BY GUARDS.

WOULD-BE LYNCHERS IN OHIO GET THE WORST OF IT.

They Force Their Way Into the Jail at Tiffin With the Intention of Lynching a Murderer—Guards Open Fire, Killing Two of Them.

Tiffin, Ohio, Oct. 29.—Several hundred men forced their way into the jail here early this morning with the intention of lynching E. J. Martin, who had murdered Marshal Schultz. They were fired upon by guards and two of the members of the mob were instantly killed. The others then retreated.

The mob was composed of the worst specimens of law defiers that any community could produce. Whisky had been indulged in until they were more like blood-thirsty wolves than human beings. To reason with them meant danger, if not death, to the peacemaker. The mob came from an entirely unexpected source. The report was current that a mob of farmers from Hopewell township was congregating on the outskirts of the town and the attack was expected to be made by them—but, instead, it was done by fellows who had been circulating in the vicinity of the jail. It was hardly supposed that they would dare to do such a thing, and the police made no effort to quiet them. Thus matters went on until about 1:15 a. m. Six men gathered on the lawn about fifty feet from the jail, and in a moment about thirty others joined them. Then a sharp whistle was heard and out of an alley on the opposite side of the street and a little to the west rushed fully 300 more, the leaders carrying a rope and several sledge hammers with which to accomplish their work. The sledge hammers were procured at a stone quarry, and the rope was thick enough to hang a dozen men. As the mob made the rush they emitted a yell that was blood-curdling, eclipsing savages.

Policemen Injured.

A squadron of policemen who had stationed themselves on the steps of the jail were whisked to one side as though they were so many straws. Officer Keiffer, who made a brave resistance, was struck on the head with a sledge and kicked brutally. He was carried home unconscious and is hovering between life and death. Officer Fisher was thrown against a brick wall and stunned, and Officer Hennessey was tumbled over in the grass and kept there by by a ruffian who held a murderous looking club over him and threatened death if he did not lie still. The other officers were treated in the same way. The mob went direct to the side entrance and commenced the onslaught on the door with their sledges. They were without any reason whatever, and made no demand for the keys. Michael Schmidutz, a powerful teamster, wielded the sledge. He was one of the drunken agitators appeared previously. The door was broken into splinters in a short time. With each blow the fury of the crowd increased. When the entrance was gained there was a wild rush and the way was filled with excited men. The sheriff and three men stood in the opposite end of the hall. He appealed to them most bravely and strongly, asking them to desist. It did no good, for the men only grew fiercer. The entrance to the corridor is first protected by a heavy sheet iron door. The lock was broken off with a few blows and then there remained the heavy grating. It was then that the guards who were in that portion

Began the Fire.

At first they shot over the rioters' heads. A guard in an interview with a representative of the press said the men swore to kill every person inside, and to show their purpose they began to fire at they. The guards said no shot was fired by them until the attacking party had fired through the grating first. Henry Multschler, the first man killed, was the one who carried the rope. He was shot through the left temple, the ball coming out on the right side, killing him instantly. Then Krist Mattes got a bullet through the heart. This awful work and the detemination of the guards awed the would-be lynchers, and they left the place, cursing, and wilder than ever.

Vic Vindone, a young Italian laborer, left with the intention of getting dynamite to blow up the building, but he never put in an appearance. While in the midst of the attack one rioter rushed upon a daughter of the sheriff and calculated to kill her. Another fellow held a revolver close to the head of Andrew Greer, a one-armed son-in-law of the sheriff, and pulled the trigger, but it missed fire and the next instant the one fist of Greer felled the would-be assassin to the floor. The sheriff's family were up stairs and one of the mob seeing them, rushed viciously at them, but some one threw him headlong to the bottom. Between 3 and 4 o'clock this morning, after the mob had moved further down the street, the prisoner was handcuffed, taken through a side door and to a side alley where a carriage was in waiting. Police Captain Falkner and Officer Sweeney took him to Sandusky county as fast as the horses could carry them. Citizens viewed the scene to-day by hundreds. Many people refused to believe that the prisoner had been taken away, and at 10 o'clock a crowd of hundreds started to make another attack but wiser counsel prevailed. The militia has been called out.

LATEST FIGURES ON STATE.

The Official Figures Increase the Total Population of the State.

The state census bureau to-day completed the official count of the population of the state by counties.

The official count makes a better showing for the state than the first count published some time ago. At that time the population was given out as 1,573,350, while the official count shows 1,574,910, an increase of 273,084 over the count of 1890.

It is a noteworthy fact that every county in the state shows a gain, even Kittson county, from which Roseau county, with a population of 3,493, has been detached since the census of 1890, shows a gain of 901. Following are the official figures:

NOT CHOLERA

But Lung Trouble Is What Is Said to Ail in Those Hogs.

Winnebago City, Minn., Oct. 27. — The swine disease which has prevailed for several weeks in the southern part of the county has finally struck several herds in this vicinity. About thirty head have died out of the very fine herd on the farm of Hon. H. W. Holley, adjoining town. Others show signs of being diseased. A farmer near Huntley lost several and then offered the rest of his herd for $1. But the forty hogs remaining were not considered a bargain even at that figure. The plague is working gradually northward and makes pretty thorough work where it goes. It is hoped that the cold weather may soon check the ravages of the plague.

W. A. Miller, a successful farmer and a close observer, says that the disease is not cholera. It is a lung trouble. Many others agree with him in that. He ascribes the disease to dust. There have been several dry seasons in succession, making the yards and pastures very dry. In moving about the swine stir up and inhale the dust. In addition to that most farmers throw feed on the ground for their hogs so that in eating they are constantly stirring a great deal of dust and inhaling it. This has led to weakness and disease of the lungs and has become contagious.

HARDACRE'S BREAK.

He Had St. Pau Letter Carriers Doing Private Detective Work.

St. Paul, Oct. 27.—Capt. George W. Hardacre, superintendent of the free delivery system of the St. Paul postoffice, has got himself into trouble by acceding to the request of the St. Paul Street Railway company to let the carriers quietly collect information concerning the jurors recently drawn on the petit jury and who were likely to serve in street railway damage cases. A number of attorneys heard of the effort and called upon Postmaster Castle, who held a stormy interview with Capt. Hardacre. It resulted in all the information being destroyed before being turned over to the company. The statement is appended that the legal department was in no wise connected with the effort to subsidize the government regime for street railway purposes.

FIGHT IN PRIVATE.

JIM AND BOB ARE BEGINING TO GET TOGETHER.

It Is Reported That All Arrangements Have Been Made and That the Contest for the Championship Will Occur This Week.

Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 29.—Constable Davis of Hot Springs was in the city to-day and gave out information which leads those who talked to him to believe that Corbett and Fitzsimmons will fight in private not far from Hot Springs one day about the latter part of this week. Last Friday morning Corbett was supplied with newspapers containing intimations to the effect that he was about to quit the state to avoid a meeting with the lanky New Zealander. After perusing the papers, it is related that he fractured the adjacent ozone with ponderous swipes and vowed that he would stay in Garland county and make mince meat, metaphorically speaking, out of Julian's man. He at once pitched into the work of training just as if he really expected to fight Fitzsimmons on Oct. 31. The prevailing opinion in Hot Springs circles is that the fight will certainly occur at some point in or near Garland county. Such an air of mystery surrounds the whole proceedings that it is very hard to get any thoroughly reliable information on the subject, but that preparations are being made in a quiet way for a fight no one doubts. Many Hot Springs people believe that the fight will occur at Whittington Park, the site originally selected, and that the battle will occur on the date originally agreed upon. They argue that the decision of the supreme court affirming the prize fight law leaves the matter exactly where it stood before Corbett was arrested, and that it was virtually a victory for the fighters. The fact that the Hot Springs Athletic club have engaged a circus tent seems to indicate, however, that some private spot has been selected. A close friend of Gov. Clark has been shown letters from Hot Springs which tend to confirm the belief that a fight will occur. One of these letters is said to have come from Attorney Martin, and stated that preparations were being made for a private fight. Gov. Clarke, in speaking of this information, is said to have remarked that he did not care how much they fought so long as it was conducted in private and without being advertised. He is also said to have remarked that he would prevent any kind of a fight. It is reported that Fitzsimmons will be arrested as soon as he arrives in the state. Earlier in the day it was reported that Corbett and Fitzsimmons had arranged to fight Nov. 1 under the auspices of the Hot Springs club.

Springfield, Mo., Oct. 29. — Action taken here last night by the Western Union Telegraph company indicates that the company is in possession of a "straight tip" that the Corbett-Fitzsimmons mill is to be pulled off at Hot Springs. Ten days ago the Western Union company sent twenty-eight linemen here to rebuild its system of wires in this city. The work has just been fairly begun and the system is in a state of chaos, with thirty days' work necessary to complete it. However, a telegraphic order has been received ordering the twenty-eight men to take the first train for Hot Springs. This is taken as an indication that the fight is to take place at some secret spot near Hot Springs and that the men are wanted to erect wires to the place. The foreman of the line gang and his men seem to be in as much ignorance of the true meaning of the order as any one else.

Bombs Found.

Madison, Wis., Oct. 29.—Madison is excited over the discovery of two bombs, of glycerine, one in the capitol yard used by the public, and one in the yard of H. J. Veerhusen, of the tailoring firm of Olsen & Veerhusen, whose employes went on strike recently. The police claim to have secured information which leads them to believe that the bombs were manufactured and left in the places where they were found by friends of the strikers. The police say that there are three or four pronounced anarchists in the city who have, since the strike, made murderous threats against tailor manufacturers.

Explosion and Death.

Fair Haven, Wash., Oct. 29.—By an explosion in the mill of the Pacific Coast Lumber company to-day two men were killed, another fatally injured and three more severely hurt, besides wrecking the mill property. Two boilers exploded, one being blown 500 feet, passing through the dry house and dropping through a railroad trestle into the water. W. A. Armstrong, the fireman, and W. J. Whitemore were killed outright, and W. M. Newkirk scalded beyond hope of recovery.

In the Third Degree.

Grand Rapids, Wis., Oct. 29.—The verdict in the Hoffman murder case, which has taken the attention of the circuit cour for the past week, was brought in this morning. Hoffman was found guilty of murder in the third degree, the same as on the former trial at Wausau. Attorneys for the defendant made a motion to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial, which will be heard Dec. 7.

PIETZEL'S MURDER.

Holmes Will be Placed on Trial for His Life To-Day.

Philadelphia, Oct. 29. — H. H. Holmes, or Herman Mudgett, whose name or alias has rung throughout the length and breadth of the continent as the most unscrupulous and skillful murderer of modern times, will be placed on trial for his life to-morrow morning in the court of oyer and terminer of this city. The specific charge to which he will be called upon to answer is the murder of Benjamin F. Peitzel, and he has already officially declared himself not guilty. The revolting details of the many crimes with which Holmes' name has been directly or indirectly connected have been given such publicity, and the cold, implacable demenor which has characterized the man throughout, has been so frequently commented upon that the trial will probably pass into history as the most celebrated case known to the criminal annals of the Western Hemisphere. The commonwealth has already expended thousands of dollars in its effort to bring the prisoner to summary justice; and there is an indication that a conviction for murder in the first degree will be obtained, and if so, he will probably be "railroaded" to the gallows.

Witnesses have been brought to this city from Boston, Chicago, Indianapolis, Irvington, Ind., and almost every city where Holmes is known to have lived at various times. What revelations these witnesses will make has been kept a profound secret by the prosecuting officers; but there is expectation of sensational developments. Detective Geyer, who has been for months traveling extensively throughout the country in search of evidence of Holmes' movements, will be one of the principal witnesses for the commonwealth. The skull and portions of the body of Pietzel, as well as the remains of the boy, Howard Pietzel, who is thought to have been murdered by Holmes in Indianapolis, will be exhibited during the course of the trial.

The murder of Pietzel, if murder it was, occurred more than a year ago. The body, burned and blackened as if by an explosion, was discovered in the house, No. 1320 Callow Hill street, this city, on Sept. 3, 1894. As he had been known as an inventor named Perry, the supposition was that he had met death by accident while experimenting. Subsequently the charge was made that Pietzel had been murdered by Holmes, an attempt having been made to defraud the Fidelity Mutual Life Association of Philadelphia out of $10,000 which had been paid by the company to Mrs. Pietzel, who was supposed to have been a party to the conspiracy, Holmes having first introduced Pietzel to the company. He was arrested in Boston on Nov. 17, and Mrs. Pietzel is in custody as, probably, the principal witness against him. There is a likelihood of the case consuming several weeks' time unless unforeseen circumstances arise to bring it to a speedy conclusion.

Insuring Consumptives.

Cincinnati, Oct. 21.—Special.—Reports say that a leading life insurance company is accepting risks to the amount of $300,000 on lives of consumptives taking the Amick Chemical Treatment for lung disease. The Amick Chemical Co. of Cincinnati is actually paying the premiums on this insurance and presenting policies to their patients. This company claims to have the most complete statistics on consumption in the world, and that these risks are good, providing the patients take a course of the Amick treatment.

OVERDUE.

Possibility of Great Loss of Life on the Pacific Ocean.

San Francisco, Oct. 29.—The list of missing and overdue ships is increasing. The Lord Brassey, eighty-one days out from Hong Kong for San Francisco, is reinsured at 15 per cent. Other vessels concerning which there is anxiety are the Lady Lawrence, from Newcastle, for Valparaiso, on which 55 per cent reinsurance has been paid; the Noddlebur1, Newcastle, for Tocopilla, 75 per cent; the Soudan, Cardiff for Callao, 30 per cent, and the Timuru, Melbourne for London, 36 per cent. The vessels in which the San Franciscans are most interested are the Star of Austria and Lord Spencer, which are considered as good as lost, and to those have been added the Earl of Hopetown, Tatoosh for Adelaide, on which 40 per cent is offered; the Nordlysel, Clyde for San Francisco; 30 per cent, and Casadena, Clyde for San Francisco, 20 per cent; these two are good risks. On board those of the overdue fleet for which there is no real cause to feel anxious are about 100 men and officers. On board vessels for which there is cause for some but not serious anxiety are about as many more souls. On vessels that are posted as missing the last eight months, and for which there is no hope, are about 150 souls. The amount of property represented by the overdue fleet is valued at about $8,000,000, including values of ships and cargoes.

CALLED NAMES.

Turbulent Scene in the French Chamber of Deputies.

Paris, Oct. 29. — Noisy scenes occurred in the house of deputies to-day during a discussion. Mr. Carmaux attempted to strike M. Burz, who attacked the attitude of the government for declining to intervene and arbitrate a dispute with the socialists. He violently denounced the ministers, one of whom he described as a member of a gang of thieves. M. Jurez was himself called a thief and at this juncture he rushed to strike M. Carmaux. His friends prevented him from making the attack, however. The chamber finally voted confidence in the government by a vote of 280 to 183.

Storm on the Lakes.

Chicago, Oct. 29. — Lake Michigan was swept by a terrific gale yesterday. During the afternoon from 1 to 3 o'clock the wind blew off the west shore at the rate of forty-four miles an hour. Small craft had a bad time in the sea that suddenly rolled up. Dispatches from St. Joseph, Mich., say the steamer Peerless, of the Lake Michigan and Lake Superior line, went aground at the entrance to the St. Joseph harbor, and now lies in a perilous situation. All on board may be lost.

IT TAKES CAPITAL

To Develop the Iron Mines of Minnesota.

A Duluth correspondent of the Minneapolis Tribune thus epitomizes the work on the Mesaba range:

The total output of the Mesaba range for 1895 is estimated at 3,000,000 tons, which is a most wonderful and gratifying growth. In 1892, the first year when there was any shipment, but 4,245 tons were produced; in 1893, 613,620 tons; in 1894, 1,778,477. These figures speak more forcibly than any comments I can make of the rapid development of that region, and at the same time it can be said in justice to the men who have furnished the money for this development that they have as yet realized only prospective profits, and by prospective profits I mean the beginning of a development which in the future may reward them for their risk and enterprise. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended at the Adams Mountain, Iron and Lake Superior mines, and employment given to thousands of men at the highest wages, given, too, at a period when the entire country was depressed and laborers in many sections were without any employment whatever. This money has all been expended in Minnesota, and not a dollar has been paid in dividends upon the enterprise or a dollar sent outside of the state except to meet the fixed interest charges.

It is said by those close to headquarters that the Rockefeller interest, for instance, so far from deriving profit from the consolidated mines, of which they are large owners, have actually advanced about a million and a half to the mines during the present season.

No one can visit the Mesaba range without feeling that the capitalists who have furnished the money to make this great development have been public benefactors. It is beyond question that the amount of production will always hold in check the prices received and that the competition with other sections of the country will never enable them to secure excessive profits.

Something He Couldn't Swallow.

Not long since, when several medical men had met, the conversation ran to the subject of the extraordinary things which a human being might swallow and still live. The familiar stories about swallowing silver coins, sets of false teeth, and so forth, had been related, when Dr. Longbow began to speak.

"Two years ago," he said, "I was called in great haste to attend a carpenter in my town, though the message said that the man was beyond doubt already dead, for he had, while holding a large gimlet in his mouth at his work, suddenly been taken with a fit of hiccoughs and swallowed the gimlet. But when I arrived at the man's house I found him comfortable. The gimlet, gentlemen, gave him no trouble at all to digest."

There was silence for a moment. Presently one of the doctors remarked:

"With you for his doctor, Longbow, the man was lucky that it was only a gimlet that he undertook to swallow."

"What do you mean?"

"Why, if he had tried to swallow one of your stories, it would have choked him to death."

Farewell to Poverty.

The hard times, often starvation, that overtook the workmen in our large cities during the financial panic of 1893 and the great strike, have evidently taught them a lesson, for they are leaving the cities in multitudes and going out to till the fields, raise live stock and wrest from Nature the boon of a sure livelihood—a livelihood that is combined with good health, a happy home and contentment.

In no part of the country has this movement been more marked than in Northwestern Minnesota where, within the past two years, mechanics, laborers and others have flocked into the country between St. Paul and Duluth in great numbers and taken up land and are already gleaning prosperity from the tillage of the soil.

The land lying between these great cities is remarkably fertile and is capable of supporting several hundred thousand more people than are now in it. There are at least a million acres of land in this district that are still available for settlement and can be obtained at low prices and on very easy terms.

A finely illustrated and well written pamphlet describing this country will be mailed free to anybody who will send his name and address to Hopewell Clarke, Land Commissioner, St. Paul & Duluth Railroad, St. Paul, Minn.

Terribly Tormented.

The following conversation is reported to have taken place between a minister and a widow, both of Aberdeen. The widow, who called upon the minister, seemed desirous of relieving her mind of something which oppressed her, at which the reverend gentleman, wishing to hurry matters, exclaimed:

"My good woman, you see I can be of no service to you till you tell me what it is that troubles you."

"Weel, sir, I'm thinkin' o' getting married again."

"Oh, that is it! Let me see; that is pretty frequent, surely. How many husbands have you had?"

"Weel, sir," she replied, in a tone less of sorrow than of bitterness, "this is the fourth. I'm sure there never was a wumman sae completely tormented wi' sic' a set of deein' men as I've been, sir."

Unnecessary to His Business.

Pacific Pete had scraped up acquaintance with the young tenderfoot.

"But how did you lose your left eye?"

"Lose it?" thunderously.

"Y—yes, sir."

"Why, I cut that 'ere eye out so's I wouldn't have ter shet it sitin' a gun."

Another Important Announcement By The Northern Pacific.

Is the through tourist car service service between St. Paul, Minneapolis and Sacramento and San Francisco California Via Portland and the famous Shasta route. The Northern Pacific overland train leaving St. Paul every Wednesday carries these cars For reservations and other information apply to C. A' Sharkey. ticket agent N, P. R. R.-Crookston, Minn.

One thing that can be said in favor of the two old parties is that they stand by their n wspaper which can not be said of the People's party. We know this by experience, With a few exceptions, the county officials are giving every thing they can to the old party papers and the papers that helped boost them into office are given the cold shoulder' And even if they are given any thing their rates are cut down until there is not one cent left in it for the publisher.—Fertile Journal

The sociable last Saturday evening was not well attended owing to the disagreeable weather. All report spending a very pleasant evening.

A Decided Advantage To The California Traveler.

Is the new through tourist car service inaugurated by the Northern Pacific R. R. in connection with the Southern Pacific R, R, Shasta Route, between the east and California points via Portland, Oregon these cars leave St. Paul and Minneapolis every Wednesday afternoon via the Northern Pacific "overland" arriving at Sacremento and San Francisco the following Monday morning, Berth rate only $6,00 for reservations apply to C. A Sharkey ticket agent N. P. R, R. Crookston Minn.

And so it goes. Last January Bro. George made a combination with four republican papers to gobble all of the county printing. He got it at his own figure' But still he don't seem to be satisfied. Is it the earth he is after or has be discovered that there isn,t as much in the printing steal as he though there was? It's true as gospel that the populist press of Polk county has not received that hearty support and encouragement from the office seeking fraternity to which it is entitled' but of all papers, the Journal has the least cause to complain, It has always received the porkers share of the good things,—McIntosh Times,

J, T. McKnight, of Red Lake Falls spent Wednesday in the city, informed the writer that the question o. county division was not dead, and even now it was more active than ever. Another effort will again be put forth to divide Polk county, but greater care must be taken in the selection of the men who will push the matter, as well as in selecting the several names for the new counties. Expert lawyers claim that the recent law relatives to the division of counties is illegal, and the friends of division will make a test case. Red Falls is determined to sever all connection with Crookston and judging from the feeling which exists in this city East Grand Forks will be right in line —East Grand Forks Courier-

The Great Northern company realizing that it will be impossible for the farmers to market the surplus potatoes and root crops at stations on its line to which the reduced rates authorized herein will apply and being desirous of making such provision as circumstances will permit to enable the farmers to save at least a portion of this crop by feeding to youngstock, will make one half regular tariff rates, with minimum of $15.00 per car on shipment of cattle and hogs in 33-foot cars north or west bound between stations in Minnesota and Dakota, Prompt advice should be given general freight office of parties who will take advantage of this reduction in rates with amount of stock which they expect to ship and points between which they will be moved,

One week from yesterday Massachusetts, Kentucky, Ohio, Iowa, Maryland, Mississippi, New Jersey and Utah will elect governors, while in New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Nebraska and Kansas minor state offisers, and legislative bodies will be elected. The most interesting contests are expected in New York, Maryland, Ohio and Kentucky. The Republicans in both Maryland and Kentucky have an excellent prospect of success; while the Democrats are not with out hope in Ohio and New Jersey. It is free silver in Kentucky which is playing hob with the Democrats, and Gorman bossism in Maryland. In Ohio the Republicans have to contend with some factional difficulties in their own ranks and with the great popularity of ex-Gov. Campbell In New York the great fight between Tammany and anti Tammany is the distinguishing feature of the contest, and despite the discouragements and difficulties at the beginning of the campaign, the prospect for the triumph of anti-Tammany is not hopeless now,—Minneapolis Journal,

John Day Smith appeared on the court house steps this morning, after trying and winning a case before Judge Russell, with the remark that it was strange that there should be an abundance of every raised in this and that yet people should be starving,

"I presume," added Warren Wakefield who was lingering near. "that there will be enough go to waste this year in this country to fill the cellars of all the residences of the city.

"There must be a screw loose somewhere," said John Day, sententiously "I've always tought so," said Warren "I'll tell you," added John Day raising his arm to high heavens acros which several chunks of violation of the smoke ordinance were flitting, I'll tell you, I've got through voting with Wall street: so, help me—lemina."

THE STING OF THE JELLYFISH.

A Jerseyman Who Studies the Sea Nettle Finds a Cure For Its Sting.

The observant Jerseyman has discovered what he believes is a sure cure for the sting of that pest of many fine bathing waters, the sea nettle or jellyfish. During the earlier part of the summer in this neighborhood the waters are quite free from the jellyfish, but when the heats of August are upon us, and those who are fortunate enough to be living near good bathing ground would be in the water every day, the sea nettles make their appearance and often in such numbers as to positively drive people away from bathing. It is not often that they become such a nuisance as this at open sea resorts, but they do so occasionally even there. It is the inclosed waters, such as the Kills, the Shrewsbury river and the lower part of Long Island sound, that suffer most.

The pretty, clear, jellylike, umbrella shaped nettles come floating into these quiet waters on every tide, increasing in size, in numbers and in virulence with every day of heat, until there is hardly a possibility of even the most careful bather remaining unstung. Even if there be not a single jellyfish in sight you cannot be sure that it is not at hand hidden just beneath where the eye can see into the waters and ready to come up when a victim is in sight, for these soft, curious creatures can swim at will, driving themselves along quite rapidly by the opening and closing of their umbrella shaped tops, and they can see and feel and smell, too, it is said. At any rate, if you try to catch one there is a good chance that it will suddenly sink out of sight as you approach it, and if you notice them drifting along with the tide you will see that they do not collide with objects in the water.

Scientific people who have studied them say that all along the edge of the umbrella top, between the streamers that hang from it like fringe, they have discovered bits of the characteristic nerves of special senses. Here they have found eye specks, auditory sacs and olfactory grooves. The mouth is at the lower end of the long central streamer. The stinging facilities of the animal lie principally in the long, slender streamers which form the fringe to the umbrella top.

You may take the whole creature up in the palm of your hand, and you will not feel a single bit of a sting. Even on the back of a tender hand it will not be felt, but get tangled up in those streamers as you swim and then feel what happens! As each fine tentacle draws about the tender parts of your body you will feel at each place of contact a sharp, burning sensation, and presently the skin there will become fiery red. Try what you may of the usual remedies for stings, and none will succeed in driving away either the pain or the redness. It is not a very severe pain, but it is annoying.

The scientific people say that the poison cells consist of a little capsule filled with an irritating liquid and containing a spirally coiled filament which has a lot of hooks upon it. When the cell is touched, they say, the filament flies out like a spring and tears the skin, and at the same time carries out the poison with it. What one notices is that every pore of the afflicted skin swells up until the part looks like goose flesh, and from each pore is exuded a copious supply of clear water. This often continues for many hours after leaving the water.

What the observant Jerseyman first noticed that led to his final experiments was the curious effect which fresh water has upon these salt water jellyfishes. He gathered a lot of them up one day, one by one, in a shrimp net and gently deposited them in the cold fresh water of one of his ornamental ponds. The jellyfishes were got into the fresh water without being broken or injured in any way, but before they could even float out into their proper form they were dead and had turned white, as if they were of albumen and had been boiled. The tentacles, which in salt water remain poisonous even when broken off, were no longer so.

Then it occurred to the Jerseyman that possibly the irritating poison which they exude might depend for its effect upon being in salt water. The next time he went bathing he took along a pail of fresh water and sought occasion to be stung. The poison was allowed to work until his bath was finished. Then the affected part was washed in the fresh water. The stinging ceased almost instantly and did not recur.

Upon another occasion the poison was left to work for several hours, and the exudation of water from the irritated pores was so great as to fairly soak a cuff from a sting on the wrist and to wet a collar from a sting on the neck. One fresh water application cured the stings at once.—New York Sun.

BATHERS ABROAD.

The English Sea Dip Is a Sternly Businesslike Affair.

There are, though the dissatisfied Briton is often reluctant to admit it, drawbacks to the continental system of bathing. It is true they do not always have the offensive machines. The bather undresses in a neat little tent or properly equipped etablissement and arrays himself, if a man, in a costume a good deal more ample than the exiguous vestment which is sufficient for the Briton bathing. As for the feminine bather abroad, she can and does bestow almost as much thought and care on her costume de mer as on her ball dress or her bicycling suit. She may be as coquettish and fashionable as she pleases, and very marvelous are the creations which one may sometimes see at Trouville or Deauville or Ostend, or, to go farther, at Bar Harbor, where the millionaires of New York recover from the fatigue of spending their fathers' or their husbands' dollars. Only, the dresses are so very natty sometimes that it seems almost a pity to get them wet, and indeed that is what a good many of the fair wearers would appear to think.

To a casual visitor at some of the fashionable continental watering places it might seem as if the bathers were doing everything except bathing. They lounge and sit on comfortable chairs and eat and drink and smoke and flirt and read, but their bathing often consists in the mildest of mild paddles. It is perhaps a pleasant way of spending a few idle hours—this sitting about in the sun, with the ladies looking like exceptionally agreeable members of a corps de ballet and the gentlemen in the garb of those about to compete in a foot race. In the way of exercise there is not much to be said for it, and we are not sure whether this gentle coquetry with the sea breezes is really quite so good for the constitution as a few minutes' rough and tumble with the waves. But, then, something must be allowed for the difference of climate and habit. The Briton, even when holiday making, is more energetic than the Gaul, and it is pleasanter to loaf on the shore at Biarritz than at Whitby with the wind whistling across the North sea!

As to the question of propriety, the verdict of most of the commentators is decisively on the French side. But even here there may be two opinions. The spectacles to be witnessed at Margate or Yarmouth are undeifying; but, then, a fat French gentleman arrayed in a tight fitting striped football suit is not an ennobling object either, nor is our Mrs. Grundy quite absurd when she maintains that this conversazione of scantily robed persons of both sexes is not altogether nice. After all, the English sea bath is a sternly businesslike affair. It is otherwise at the American and continental resorts, where the bathing often seems only an excuse for a good deal of promiscuous dalliance. The people who hastily assume that we can turn our beaches into an imitation of the lively places on the Norman coast should bear these points in mind, and, as we have said, they should also make allowance for such considerations as climate. A good many things will have to be changed before English people will be induced to change their rapid medicinal dip for an hour's lounge in bathing dress.—London Standard.

Completely Sold.

Recently, at one of our large hotels, while a party were holding an argument on the subject of spiritualism, one young fellow expressed his belief that there was something in it, as he himself was a sort of a "medium."

"How a medium?" inquired one of the speakers.

"Why," replied the wag, "I can do a good many mysterious things; for instance, I can make a bell ring without touching it."

The other offered to wager that he couldn't. The wag persisted and said that he would lay him £5 he could make at least a dozen of the bells in the passage ring within two minutes without leaving his seat.

"Done!" exclaimed the skeptic, and the money was staked.

The young fellow turned round on his seat, opened a closet door and turned off the gas from the upper part of the building. In less than one minute half the bells in the passage began to ring violently, the persons above having suddenly lost their lights.

And so, of course, the money was fairly won.—London Tit-Bits.

The Right Kind of Steers.

A writer in Farmer's Advocate (Man.) has this to say as to the best quality for feeding steers: "It appears to us that it would be profitable to farmers having damaged wheat, to put up as many steers as could be properly handled and feed them for next spring's market. And we might just add a word here: Great care should be taken in selecting steers to feed; don't select old oxen, or big, raw-boned, slab-sided, three-year-olds, with the hope of having something big. Of course, such stock would be a big granary for damaged wheat, but it is not the animal that can put the most wheat out of sight that will return the most profit. Select nice, smooth, uniform, two-year-olds, with good backs and quarters, whose appearance shows that they have some breeding in them. Such steers will make far better use of the food given them, and will return more profit, even if they cost more money at first."

The Percentage of Poor Eyes.

Only one person in fifteen has both eyes in good condition, and in seven cases out of ten one eye, generally the right, is stronger than the other. It is found that just as people are right or left-handed, so they are right or left-sighted, and while apparently looking with both eyes, they often really use only one. Out of twenty persons whose eyes were tested by a German doctor, two only were found to be left sighted. The reason of the greater strength generally possessed by the right eye is not altogether understood, but probably the natural tendency to the greater use of the right side of the body has something to do with it. In using weapons, for instance, mankind has been taught to assume for ages attitudes in which the right hand and side have most exercise, and this discipline has undoubtedly had its effect on the eye. Old sea captains, after long use of the telescope, find their right eye much stronger than the left—the direct effect of exercise. This law is confirmed by the experience of aurists. If a person who has ears of equal hearing powers has cause to use one ear more than the other for a long period, the ear brought it to requisition is found to be strengthened, and the ear not used loses its hearing in a corresponding degree.

It Will Come In Handy.

Mr. Chase (rushing from the room)—One minute, Mary! One minute!

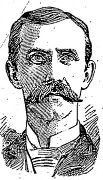
JUST IN TIME.

A Terrible Catastrophe Averted How Mr. Dice almost passed the portals of death. Restored to health in a manner that seems miraculous.

There are thousands of people in the world that are dying daily, who even a few hours before the end were in no worse condition than was Mr. John Dice of 2629 W. 3rd Street, Duluth, Minn. His sufferings, from his own account, must have been terrible, afflicted as he was with severe kidney and stomach trouble; but perhaps it would be best to let him describe his sickness and how he was restored to health by the use of Kickapoo Indian Sagwa, in his own words:

"I have suffered greatly from trouble with my kidneys and stomach. In rising after bending down I would become very dizzy; everything would look black to me. I knew that I was threatened with Bright's disease. I tried many physicians and different remedies, but all failed to help me. I gave up ever being well again. I tried Kickapoo Indian Sagwa a few weeks ago, and am now on my third bottle, and I can thankfully say all traces of the disease has left me, and I know I am a well man today"



JOHN DICE.

Most people do not realize that these sudden dizzy spells, pains in the small of the back, and inability to retain refreshing sleep, a loss of appetite, a face that has an unnatural pallor and a puffy appearance are the unmistakable evidences of Bright's disease, or some other terrible kidney complication.

Sufferers so afflicted drag out a miserable existence, growing weaker from day to day until they hail the sudden death that eventually overtakes them as a blessing for releasing them from pain. But, why get in this condition? Follow Mr. Dice's example; with the first symptoms take Kickapoo Indian Sagwa, that most wonderful and effectual of all remedies for the cure of all derangements of the stomach, liver and kidneys, and the greatest blood purifier known to medical science.

Thousands of testimonials similar to the above are continually reaching us. Add yours to the list; you surely will when you find that this great remedy has saved your life. Remember, though always effectual, it is absolutely harmless, containing no poisonous ingredients whatever. It has been used by Indians for centuries and their long life and freeness from such troubles as described above make them living examples of its wonderful power.

germ-life

The doctors tell us, now-a-days, that disease germs are everywhere; in the air, in the water, in our food, clothes, money; that they get into our bodies, live there, thrive and grow, if they find anything to thrive on. Consumption is the destruction of lung-tissue by germs where the lung is too weak to conquer them. The remedy is strength—vital force.

Scott's Emulsion, with hypophosphites, means the adjustment of lung strength to overcome germ-life. It is fighting the germ with the odds in our favor. These tiny little drops of fat-food make their way into the system and re-fresh and re-invigorate it. Whether you succeed with it or not depends on how good a start the germs had, and how carefully you can live. The shortest way to health is the patient one. The gain is often slow.

MASON WASPS FOND OF WORK.

Rather Than Use a Nest Twice, She Builds Anew.

An interesting insect which can be seen in Central Park building the home for her young is the mason wasp, says the New York Tribune. These are particularly fond of the arches which span the transverse roads, and here these wonderful masons can be seen busily at work. They are deep purple in color, with the slenderest of waists and a body tapering off to a needle point, which carries a wicked sting.

The insects can be seen where there is a wet patch on the roads, and the careful watcher will see that the wasp is busy rolling up a ball of mud. When this is large enough, it is held close against the body of the forelegs and away goes the little mason to her nest. With a great deal of buzzing that ball of moist mud is added to the cell, which is generally about an inch long and cylindrical in shape.

When the cell is built, the wasp leaves the mud-pools and can be seen busy among the bushes and grass. She is in search of small caterpillars and spiders, which are stung into insensibility. Each of these is taken to the cell until the cell is filled. The writer has taken over twenty victims out of one cell. The wasp then lays her egg in one of the caterpillars and returns to the mudhole for more mortar to close her nest finally. The egg hatches in a few days and the larva feeds on the imprisoned insects, which, strange to say, owing to the poison which has been injected into them, do not decay. When the supply of food is exhausted the larva turns into a chrysalis, and lies dormant in its earthen cell until the following summer.

In the tropics these mason wasps are a great nuisance, as they build their nests all about the rooms, generally on the ceiling, and when these nests are brushed down an ugly yellow patch is always left behind. A wasp will build as many as a dozen nests in a bunch.

The young matured wasp eats his way out of the cell, leaving behind only the husk of his pupa, but these cells are never used a second time. The writer has often watched these industrious little builders making their nests while there were a score of empty cells around which needed only a cleaning out. These wasps do a great deal of good in destroying thousands of leaf eating insects.

POWER OF A PIANIST.

Pounds of Strength Expended in Striking a Note Heavily.

It requires more force to sound a note gently on the piano than to lift the lid of a kettle. A German composer has figured that minimum pressure of the finger playing pianoissimo is equal to 110 grams—a quarter of a pound. Few kettle lids weigh more than two ounces. The German's calculations are easy to verify if one takes a small handful of coins and piles them on a key of the piano. When a sufficient quantity is piled on to make a note sound they may then be weighed and these figures will be found to be true. If the pianist is playing fortissimo a much greater force is needed. At times a force of six pounds is thrown upon a single key to produce a solitary effect. With chords the force is generally spread over the various notes sounded simultaneously, though a greater output of force is undoubtedly expended. This is what gives pianists the wonderful strength in their fingers so often commented on. A story used to be told of Paderewski that he could crack a pane of French plate glass half an inch thick merely by placing one hand upon it, as if upon a piano keyboard, and striking it sharply with his middle finger. Chopin's last study in C minor has a passage which takes two minutes and five seconds to play. The total pressure brought to bear on this, it is estimated, is equal to three full tons. The average "tonnage" of an hour's piano playing of Chopin's music varies from twelve to eighty-four tons.

Betrothals in Holland.

In certain parts of Holland when a young man thinks he loves a girl he asks her for a match to light his cigar at the door of the beloved one's home. This is done to let the parents know that something is intended, and if the visit is repeated and the same thing occurs no doubt is left in the minds of the girl's parents, and they immediately proceed to investigate the young man's character and antecedents. When he calls a third time they are prepared to give him an answer. If his suit is looked upon favorably he is given a match. If refused, he produces his own match, lights his cigar and walks away. If a favorable answer is given he steps forward and joins hands with the girl. While the engagement is by no means a settled fact even at this important stage, it is stated as a truth that if, on the occasion of the young man's third visit, his inamorata offers him a second cigar and he smokes it in the house the engagement is never canceled.

A Cambridge Suggestion.

A gentleman hailing from Cambridge makes the valuable suggestion that in future international yacht races the navy be employed in policing the sea in order that there may be no interference from the excursion steamers. But whose navy? In the event, for example, of another race, between Defender and Valkyrie, does this Cambridge gentleman suppose that England would consent that the American navy should do all the policing? Hardly. John Bull would surely insist on sending over a few gun-boats to assist in the police business. Nothing would be decided as to the sailing qualities of yachts. The country with the better navy would win the race, with a heavy loss on both sides and the seas incarnadined.

Very Probable.

Jack Beam, of Fayetteville, Ky., while out riding six years ago was thrown from his horse and badly bruised. The horse ran away and could not be found. The other day while Beam was standing in the yard, the horse walked up to the gate. One moldy strap was the only vestige of his harness left, and his hair was long and full of dirt. It is believed that the horse has been living in the woods ever since he ran away.

The railroads of this country give employment to 900,000 people.

THE DRUG CLERK'S STORY

He Talks of Headaches and Nervousness and Gives Cures for Both.

From the Evening News, Newark, N. J.

It was the drug clerk's turn to tell a story of one of his experiences, and the reporter, expecting something good, as usual, settled himself comfortably in a chair prepared to give his undivided attention to the speaker. The latter was Henry Maier, who resides with his parents on Acqueduct Street, Newark, N. J., and who hands out medicine over the counter of Dr. Andrew F. Burkhardt's drug store at 271 Orange Street, this city.

"Perhaps I can do nothing better," he began, "than to tell you the secret of my good health. It is a story that I have told to many, recently, and as it resulted in good in each case, it may be worth your while to listen to it. To begin with, I was not always strong and robust, as I am now. Long hours of work and hard study had left me in a wretched condition. Frightful lingering headaches found me a ready victim, and at times I was so nervous that the dropping of a pin would cause me to give a violent start, and then I would be seized with a fit of trembling that was, to put it mildly, exceedingly bothersome. Well, I began to doctor myself. Now I flatter myself that I know something of medicine; but with all my knowledge, I could find nothing that would cure those terrible headaches or put an end to my extreme nervousness. When I picked up a bottle my hand would shake as though I had the chills, and if it was a powder that I was handling I stood a good chance of sprinkling it all over these black trousers. Things went from bad to worse, and I soon realized that a man of my physical condition had better not attempt to mix any medicine.

"'Try a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills,' said Dr. Burkhardt, one day; and as you know the doctor's advice is always worth following, I got the Pink Pills and began to take them. Would you believe it? Before I had taken the contents of one box my headache began to give me a day off occasionally, and soon it left me entirely. How about my nervousness? Well, the pills put an end to that, with almost startling abruptness. You see I know enough about the business to appreciate the importance of following the prescribing physician's directions, and by paying strict attention to those given by Dr. Williams with each box of his Pink Pills, I was soon another fellow. Look at me now! A picture of health, eh? Well, that is what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will do for a man, or a woman either. See, I can hold a glass of water out now without spilling a drop, but I couldn't do that two months ago and—

"What is it ma'am?" he asked as a neatly dressed woman came up to the counter. "A box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills." "Yes, ma'am, fifty cents please. Thank you."

"These Pink Pills are great things," said Mr. Maier as he turned to the reporter again, and the latter, after all he had heard, thought so too.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., for 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

Had the Effect.

It was with much admiration that she gazed at them.

"If these don't turn people's heads when I ride down the street," said she, "I miss my guess."

HE OWNED THE FLY.

The Fat Passenger Resented the Interference of the Stranger.

It was on the west-bound express over the Michigan Central the other afternoon. A fat man, who had been complaining of the heat, dust, rate of progress and many other things, finally decided to take a nap. Before getting settled down and closing his eyes he was seen by those nearest him to take an artificial fly from his vest pocket and place it on his nose, but it was a quarter of an hour before it attracted attention. Then a woman looked back and noticed it and said to her husband:

"Samuel, do you see that? You had better go and brush that fly off that poor man's nose. It's a wonder he can sleep with it, but I s'pose he's tired out."

"Yes, I guess I'll do that much for him," replied the man, and he rose up and went back. The fly was quiet, and he advanced his thumb and finger and carefully picked it off and dropped it on the floor.

"Wha-what is it?" asked the bald-headed man, as he roused up.

"A fly on your nose, sir."

"A fly, eh! Where is it? Ah! I see."

He picked it up and replaced it on his nose and said:

"Sir, I would thank you to mind your own business! This is my fly. I purchased him for 10 cents. Attend to your own fly and I will to mine."

He leaned back for another nap, and after looking at him in a bewildered way for half a minute the farmer returned to his wife.

"What is it, Samuel?" she asked.

"Nuthin'—nuthin', 'cept if I had that feller down in our tamarack swamp I'd maul him till he couldn't breathe fur making a fool of me!"—Detroit Free Press.

THE HOLY MAN OF BENARES.

One of the Curiosities of India Is Swami Bhaskarananda Saraswati.

Here is a photograph of "the Holy Man of Benares." One of the curiosities of mankind, he is visited by almost every traveler who goes to Benares. His name is Swami Bhaskarananda Saraswati, and he is about 65 years old. He lives near the Monkey Temple, in a garden belonging to a Raja, wears no clothing, sleeps on the ground and accepts no gratuities, because he wants nothing. "By much study and long contemplation of religion," it has been said, "he claims to be free from all passions—free even from the very wants of life." He has a face full of sympathy and kindness. He discusses and explains his ideas of religion whenever a visitor desires to hear him, and he treats every one of the multitudes who call upon him with constant and most cordial kindness. Part of his writings has been published in a bulky volume.—Sketch.

FOR WHIST PLAYERS.

A Convenient Device for Holding the Cards Easily.

The card season will soon be open in earnest, and card playing promises to be as popular, if not more so, than last winter, and this has prompted the invention of numberless conceits for the card player's convenience. The one shown is an English idea, designed to relieve the whist player's hand from the cramp often experienced in holding the cards. It is in the form of two celluloid disks, joined in the center of the revolving screw. The cards are inserted between the two disks, as shown, and held firmly by means of India rubber bands fitted around the edge of the holder. The back disk is held with the left hand by means of a loop attached to its surface, and which can be passed over the finger, and the front disk is moved toward the right in order to conveniently display the cards; these are easily withdrawn or replaced, as required.

AIR PROPELLER FOR STEAMSHIPS.

It is t Suggestion Which is too Difficult to be Appreciated as Practicable.

To propel balloons and the various forms of airships, so-called, by some kind of screw propeller, much after the manner followed in current steamship practice, has for a long time been one of the aims of aeronautic enthusiasts. To equip an ordinary ship, however, in its legitimate element with air propellers, or, in other words, with propellers revolving in the air instead of in the water, and to effect propulsion solely by their aid, is one of the latest suggestions of the times. It has been proposed to make these air propellers similar in shape to the ordinary water screw, with sails or blades of thin sheet metal, and it is said to have been found, experimentally, that for equal numbers of revolutions equal intensity of thrust, engine power and speed, the area of the propeller should be about twelve times that of the water screw. A big Atlantic liner, skimming over the sea with what would look like a string of children's mammoth pinwheels on each side, spinning around in the air, is the startling vision for which, apparently, we are called upon to prepare ourselves.

Goose-Bone Weather-Signs.

The goose bone weather prophet is with us again, and as he finds that the goose bone is nearly all white this year he does not hesitate to predict that snow will lie on the ground from early in December until late in April. Those incredulous persons who may not be convinced by the whiteness of the goose bone are referred to the fact that corn husks are unusually thick this year. This is a dead sure sign of a long, cold winter and furious storms, and such prediction is further confirmed by the fact that woodchucks and chipmunks are already fat enough to kill.—Troy Times.

The mightiest host of this sort is the army of individuals whose bowels, livers and stomachs have been regulated by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Malaria, la grippe, dyspepsia, and a tendency to inactivity of the kidneys, are conquered by the Bitters.

Invitations.

There are various forms of invitations, but it is better that all formal invitations should be engraved. Informal ones should always be written, and entirely by one hand. It is very bad form, in case a woman has a secretary, to have her write an invitation, all but the name, and have that supplied by the chirography of the hostess. It is considered more elegant in a social communication to write dates and the time of day; for example, June fifteenth in place of June 15. It is redundant to state the date of the sending of a formal, written invitation, but it is wiser to date all acceptances and regrets in order that the sender may be conscious that she is promptly and courteously rewarded for her kind attention.

It is surprising how brutally indifferent both men and women are about accepting or declining dinner, luncheon or house party invitations—the men are far worse than the women. Such invitations, especially those for dinner and luncheon, should be answered within twelve hours after one has been received. Many fail to appreciate that to be asked to a friend's house at a stated time is the highest possible compliment, and consequently deserving of every consideration. Etiquette is a much-despised word, but it is founded upon the principles of good sense, and should be regarded by the polite world; and if one attempts to be of that world he must observe its canons strictly.

It was the culmination of a peculiar mystery that has puzzled Clifton Heights for two years. He is the famous "cloak man," who has terrorized women and children. A feature of the case is that Stillwagen says he dressed in women's clothes in order to run down his wife's alleged admirer. Stillwagen was on his way to a dance when arrested.

Two Indians on the Okanagon (Wash.) reservation, stole a twelve-year-old girl, Mary, daughter of James Poll, and, taking her out in the mountains, tied her, Mazeppa-like, upon a cayuse, and turned her adrift on the wild country to the north. For nearly two days the cayuse wandered aimlessly about the wilderness with the senseless victim strapped upon its back. Thus she was found on Monday by a party of searchers out looking for her.

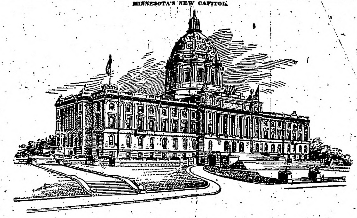
MINNESOTA'S NEW CAPITOL.



Designed by Cass Gilbert.
(Illustration Made From a Drawing From a Photograph of the Architect's Plan)

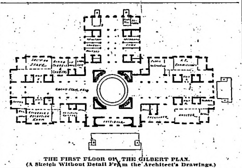
THE STATE CAPITOL.

THE COMMISSION SELECTS CASS GILBERT'S DESIGN.

Other Prize Winners Are G. R. Mann of St. Louis, E. P. Bassford and Traphagen and Fitzpatrick of Duluth, C. H. Johnson of St. Paul and H. W. Jones of Minneapolis.

St. Paul, Oct. 31.—The capitol commission met here to-day, and, after thoroughly discussing the different plans submitted, awarded the first prize to Cass Gilbert of St. Paul. In awarding the work to Mr. Gilbert the commission made some reservations with regard to his plans and there will be some interior changes, but they will be made to conform with the general plan accepted. The building will cost $1,270,002.

All the members were, of course, present. They are Daniel Shell of Worthington, George DuToit of Chaska, H. M. Lamberton of Winona, Channing Seabury of St. Paul, John De Laittre of Minneapolis, C. H. Graves of Duluth and E. E. Corliss of Fergus Falls.



THE FIRST FLOOR OF THE GILBERT PLAN.
(A Sketch Without Detail From the Architect's Drawings.)

The commissioners have been for some time divided in their sentiments. They have had the same general ideas of what was desirable in a capitol building but could not agree to which of the architects best fulfilled those requirements. That they were not influenced altogether by the report of the expert whom the plans were submitted is demonstrated by the fact that one of the prizes was given to Harry W. Jones, of Minneapolis, who was not among the architects recommended by the expert. All of the plans have been very carefully gone over, and the choice made, unanimous as it was, is the result of long and deliberate consideration.

The following resolution was adopted by unanimous vote:

Resolved, That this board, having carefully examined all of the designs submitted in this competition, and having been thoroughly advised with respect to each of them, hereby makes the following awards:

First—Design No. 38, submitted by Cass Gilbert of St. Paul, Minn., is hereby adopted as the design of the new capitol building, subject to such revisions as the board may hereafter order; and the said Cass Gilbert is hereby appointed architect of the said new capitol building; provided, that a satisfactory contract can be made with him.

Second—For the second best design the sum of $1,000 is hereby awarded to George R. Mann of St. Louis, Mo., for design No. 2.

Third—For the third best design the sum of $800 is hereby awarded to Traphagen & Fitzpatrick of Duluth, Minn., and E. P. Bassford of St. Paul, Minn., for Design No. 32.

Fourth—For the fourth best design the sum of $700 is hereby awarded to Clarence H. Johnson of St. Paul, Minn., for Design No. 39.

Fifth—For the fifth best design the sum of $500 is hereby awarded to Harry W. Jones of Minneapolis, Minn., for Design No. 24.

The commission specifically reserves to itself the right to make such changes as it shall deem desirable, and most of those changes from the plans were decided on before the award was made. What they will consist of will develop later. The general specifications are included in the statement submitted by Mr. Gilbert with his plan. They are as follows:

Description of the Building.

The cost of the building complete will be $1,270,002, as shown by estimate and specifications submitted herewith. In addition to my own estimate I have had well known and responsible contractors make estimates upon the cost of the building, and have taken the maximum of their estimates rather than the minimum, and I herewith submit the same for your consideration.

Careful measurements of the drawings show the cubical contents of the building to be 4,415,693 feet. The cost may be variously estimated per cubic foot, according to the elaboration of the finish and material. But it can be safely assumed at from 30 to 35 cents per cubic foot to erect and finish the building in a thoroughly first-class manner.

While the general specifications describe the proposed building, I would mention the following points in connection with the general arrangement of the plan.

The first elemetns considered in making this design have been the practical ones of economy and good construction. Next after this and hardly less important have been the questions of a suitable and convenient arrangement of the interior of the building, giving ample light and ventilation to all its parts, and convenient access between those parts of the structure most requiring it, and, finally, that it shall express in all its parts as a whole the dignity of its purpose.

The rooms most used have been located on the first story, and the most important ones, so far as practicable, have been placed on the south front, and so grouped as to best accommodate the business of the state officers.

The house of representatives, the senate and the supreme court have been placed in the second story, and, being large rooms, extend clear through to the roof, being lighted from the top by ample skylights and side lights in the low domes. The house of representatives being given additional light from three sides by windows in the galleries, which light the room without throwing a glare of light in the eyes of its occupants.

Heating and Ventilation.

The heating and ventilation of these rooms, as in fact of the whole building, has been given especial attention, and would be accomplished by a plenum and and exhaust system, operated by fans and electric motors.

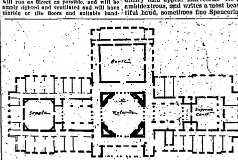
The house and senate are located so as to provide an easy and convenient communication between them, without the need of passing through public corridors. The public being excluded from the corridors used for this communication during the time the legislature is in session, by means of light bronze panelled screens of ornamental design, with bronze gates in same, all of which can be removed when not required.

The supreme court is located in the east wing, and while convenient of access, it is sufficiently secluded from the other parts of the building to prevent undue intrusion. By an arrangement which I believe to be wholly original as to this design, the judges' chambers, the library and the supreme court clerk are placed so as to give convenient access from one to the other without passing into the public corridors, and also giving the public convenient entrance to each of them. This is a point which will be approved by all familiar with the usage of the court.

The library is placed partly in the second story and partly in the third story, it being intended that the books most used shall be kept in the second story, and that the librarian's room shall be located there. The third story being used either by direct access to readers to the alcoves, or the books be brought to the reading room on the second story by assistants, or by such a system as is now in use in the Boston public library and the new Massachusetts state house, as may be determined by the librarian. The alcoves will all be lighted both from above and from the sides.

The space in the library will provide for about 100,000 volumes.

Throughout the building the corridors will run as direct as possible, and will be amply lighted and ventilated and will have marble or tile floors and suitable handsome finish, according to their relative importance.



SECOND FLOOR OF THE GILBERT PLAN.
(A Sketch Without Detail From the Architect's Drawings.)om

The grand stair halls in each wing will be lighted directly from above, in a manner somewhat similar to the lighting in the Indiana state capitol, although the design of these grand halls has been made on other lines than in that building. Floor lights of dull glass, three inches thick, would be placed as part of the mosaic or marble flooring in these halls, admitting light to the corridor below and lighting it evenly and amply its entire length. It is believed that these grand stair halls, opening, as they do, from the rotunda, will not only give ample space for the accommodation of the public, but will give the interior of the building an air of grandeur and amplitude.

It is assumed that the purpose of the rotunda is to provide a great central space in the building to accommodate the moving crowd of people who come to it, when great public ceremonies are performed, or when legislation of unusual interest is under way. In my opinion the floor of the rotunda should be on the same level as that of the house of representatives and senate. Any other arrangement will inevitably force the people into the immediate lobbies of the house and senate and overcrowd them, while with this arrangement ample space will be given.

In the center of the rotunda I have planned an opening thirty feet square which will give ample light on the first floor.

The Expert's Opinion.

The following is what Expert Wheelright has to say of Mr. Gilbert's design:

The legislative chambers are in the north and west wings. The arrangement of these chambers, one to the other, and of the supreme court in connection with the library, all being on the second floor, as suggested by the commission, is more satisfactorily gained in this design than in any of the others which I considered worthy of premiums. The committee rooms are conveniently adjacent to the legislative chambers and are under control. The retiring rooms for these chambers are both placed back of the speaker's chair. This plan presents the best arrangement of supreme court and library, but, while showing ample space, in the proper location, for the convenient location of all the minor offices of the court, the reporters of the court have not been assigned this floor in conjunction with the offices of clerk of court, as might have been done and as is desirable to do.

The library occupies the space to the north, and the judges' rooms and other offices on the east and south, as is desirable for such working offices.

The corridors of first and second story are admirably lighted, some at the end and others on the sides. The lighting of the basement could be improved, and a better staircase effect could be gained if the form of staircase shown in No. 2 were adopted. The plan readily admits of this change.

The opening in the second floor of rotunda is too small.

The first floor shows well arranged offices, and, although the governor's reception room does not hold a very important position in plan, its dignity is satisfactorily recognized in its treatment.

The space assigned for historical society in basement is well concentrated, and, being placed in the same wing as the library, arrangements might be made for the common use of the two collections.

The author of this design has restricted himself to a less area (about 4,300,000 cubic feet) than any of the five which I recommend. He shows less "unassigned space" than do Numbers 2 and 7. It is apparent also that if he had not kept so safely within the limit of space advised by the commissioners (4,500,000), he might have improved his design externally. More interest of shadow effect might thus have been given, especially by the increase of the projection of the flanking pavilions on the north and south facades.

Scholarly and Well Proportioned.

He presents a scholarly, well proportioned and refined design for the exterior. The only points of detail that I would criticize is the ornament above the central windows, and the balconies on the flanking pavilions above mentioned, both being features of insufficient dignity for such a building.

The approaches are well designed. The colonnade above the main entrance, with its richly ornamented side piers capped by well placed sculpture, would be a very fine feature.

The porte cochere under the main entrance is well handled and has merit of great practical convenience.

As a whole, the dome is very good. Especially noteworthy is the fine proportions and beauty of outline of its mass; the coupled columns, with their pilasters, strengthen to the eye and enrich the drum of the dome. The outline of the dome itself is very refined, and it is capped by a delicately designed lantern, which would give rich play of light and shade. The ornamentation of the dome is excessive, at least relatively to the character of the design of the main body of the building.

The chief defect in treatment of the dome is that it springs too suddenly from the roof of the building, with but a slightly marked plinth to break the transition.

If it were thought desirable to give the building a more varied and broken exterior, the plan lends itself to a roofing similar to that shown in No. 39.

HE'S A GREAT PENMAN.

A Frisco Man Who Writes With Both Hands at Once.

Gus Mooney, a copyist in the county clerk's office, is the happiest man with a pen in the new city hall. He performs all sorts of feats that to the ordinary man appear marvelous. He is ambidextrous, and writes a most beautiful hand, sometimes fine Spencerian and other times a round back hand that is like copper plate.

Mooney copies the wills filed into the record, and usually writes the page on the left side of the open book with his right hand and the next page with his left so that he always has a rest for his arm. When he tires of writing a running hand he turns the book a little and writes page after page in his back hand style.

Mooney can take two pens, one in each hand, and starting at a common point write two signatures simultaneously, writing the one with his left hand backward, and the signatures will be almost exactly alike. He seems to do his thinking with his wrist, too for he will write two entirely different names at the same time and with a dash and a flourish that is surprising, and occasionally he varies the monotony of his work by copying two different wills at the same time, or by commencing at the last letter of one will and copying it backward with his left hand, while he copies another from the beginning with his right.—San Francisco Post.

THE TOWN IN RUINS.

FIRE ALMOST COMPLETELY DESTROYS WALCOTT, MINN.

A Lantern Explodes in the Engine Room of the Walcott Mills and Start a Fire That Causes a Loss of a Quarter of a Million.

Faribault, Minn., Nov. 5.—Walcott, a town of about 400 inhabitants located four miles south of here, was almost entirely destroyed by fire. The well known Walcott mills are located there and were entirely destroyed. The mills and most of the buildings burned were owned by M. B. Sheffield of this city.

The fire started by the explosion of a lantern in the engine room, and soon everything was a mass of flames. The Faribault and Northfield fire departments were sent for, but were not of much assistance. The town is located on a spur track of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road. Farm buildings within a half mile were burned, as a very strong wind from the south was blowing, which helped to wipe out the town. The Walcott mill was the largest outside of Minneapolis and St. Paul. It had a capacity of 1,000 barrels per day, and made the famous "Gold Mine" flour. It was a four-story building. The 75,000-bushel elevator was also burned, with over 35,000 bushels of wheat. The warehouse, with about $4,000 worth of flax, barley and oats, was also burned. About 25,000 barrels of flour were burned, including five loaded cars standing near the mill. The loss is from $175,000 to $200,000.

The hotel, occupied by Mr. Sexton, and about seven dwellings, with part of the contents, were also destroyed. The store building owned by Louis Knuteson and the government post-office were also destroyed. The books and records and office of the Walcott creamery went up in the flames. E. H. Thatcher's barn, granary, etc., are no more. The total loss will undoubtedly reach $250,000. It is not known whether the mill will be built again.

WENT DOWN A BANK.

Fatal Accident on the B. & O. Near Wheeling, W. Va.

Wheeling, W. Va., Nov. 4. — The worst railroad wreck in the immediate vicinity of Wheeling for many years occurred this morning at Elm Grove, five miles east, on the Pittsburg division of the Baltimore & Ohio road. The Pittsburg-Cincinnati express, commonly known as the Cannon Ball, jumped the track on a bridge over Wheeling creek, owing to a broken flange on the wheel of the smoking car. The engine, tender and baggage car kept the track, while the mail car, smoker and Pullman parlor car went over a bank about sixteen feet high. The day coach turned completely over and the other two lay on their sides. The cars were completely demolished, seeming to have been thrown some distance through the air.

The killed were Mrs. Miranda Hare, Kittanning, Pa.; eight-months'-old child of Lawrence Bartley, Allegheny.

The injured, so far as they can be found, are Ella Vance, Wheeling, spine probably broken; may die. C. J. Garvey, oil inspector, Marietta, O., head crushed and back wrenched; will probably die. W. N. Rose, right arm broken. Michael J. Mahoney, McKeesport, Pa., face cut and mashed. Mrs. M. J. Mahoney, face cut and hip hurt. E. W. Gilbert, Sharpsburg, Pa., thigh broken and head badly cut. J. N. Couchenow, Bellefield, left elbow broken. William Richardson, Sharpsburg, Pa., back and head cut and bruised. James W. Foster, Beaver Falls, Pa., right foot broken and face and back cut. W. J. Chapman, West Bridgewater, Pa., right leg and hand broken. Charles Harkins, Altoona, right temple and scalp cut. P. R. Rahm, Philadelphia, badly cut and bruised. George Perkins, conductor Pullman car, head cut and hip bruised. George Crouse, Allegheny City, scalp wounds. Mrs. Crouse, knee dislocated. Mrs. Dr. A. F. Stifel, Pittsburg, slightly hurt. Jacob Zulauff, Pittsburg, left arm dislocated. Albert Gaus, Pittsburg, both legs badly burned. R. Gaus, Pittsburg, legs cut and bruised. Mrs. Watts, Wheeling, elbow dislocated. Louis Schuchert, Pittsburg, head cut and bruised; badly hurt. J. M. Frasher, Wheeling, head and breast cut and bruised. W. C. Hawley, Allegheny, face and nose crushed and arm cut. Mrs. Dixon, Pittsburg, badly cut and back wrenched. Maud Vance, internal injuries and severe cuts. Mrs. Malone, Allegheny, head cut and hurt internally. J. D. Stanton, mail agent, chest, shoulder and leg cut and bruised. Mrs. Le June, Allegheny, forehead crushed. Perry Parker, porter Pullman car, face cut. Mrs. Clarke, Allegheny, shoulder dislocated and bruised. Mrs. Starr, daughter and granddaughter, painfully cut. M. Dixon and wife, Pittsburg, painfully cut. John Renscher, Pittsburg, head and neck cut. C. M. Kiskaddon, Columbia, Pa., head bruised. Anthony McTighe, Pittsburg, left leg badly cut.

These names probably do not cover more than half those who were more or less hurt, but able to get away. They scattered almost at once and cannot all be found. Many of those seriously hurt were able to leave for home.

No Smuggling There.

Bayfield, Wis., Nov. 5.—The report that a gang of smugglers operating between this place and the Canadian shores of Lake Superior have been run down, and that some of the leading merchants of Bayfield are implicated, seems to have been manufactured out of whole cloth. So far as can be ascertained there is no truth in the rumor.

Church Scorched.

La Crosse, Wis., Nov. 5.—Fire damaged F. A. Gross' factory several hundred dollars and destroyed $1,000 worth of finished wood work for the interior of the German Methodist church. One fireman fell from the ladder and was injured.

Mules Perish.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Nov. 5.—A spark from a pipe which an employe was smoking, set fire to the hay in the mule stable in the Dorrance mine last night. Eighteen mules perished.

GENEROUS ROCKEFELLER.

Another Three Millions for the Chicago University.

Chicago, Nov. 5.—The largest donation ever made to an educational institution at one time by one man to-day became the gift to the Chicago university, when F. T. Gates, representing John D. Rockefeller, announced to the trustees of the institution that the Eastern capitalist had determined to add $3,000,000 to his already munificent donations. Mr. Rockefeller's generosity to the university in past years is well known. Not only was he its principal founder, but his interest in its welfare has been constantly on the increase. He had already given the institution $4,000,000, and the additional endowment announced to-day will swell the total amount to $7,000,000. Mr. Rockefeller is probably the richest man in the world, his wealth being estimated at from $125,000,000 to $150,000,000. Twenty years ago he was a newspaper reporter in Cleveland, Ohio, and later, the keeper of a little store there. Becoming interested in the business of refining the product of the Pennsylvania oil fields he started a small refinery, from which grew the greatest monopoly in the world, the Standard Oil company, capitalized at $95,000,000.

DECLARED OFF.

Corbett and Fitzsimmons Have Given It Up.

Hot Springs, Ark., Nov. 5.—The big fight is off for good. It is easy to see how it never was really on, as far the the State of Arkansas was concerned. Not only is the Corbett-Fitzsimmons match dead and buried, but the Maher-O'Donnell and Smith-Ryan contests are yet in the future. Gov. Clarke has won out on every point at issue and has an unqualified victory over the prize-fighting element. There is no doubt that Corbett and Fitzsimmons, individually, have been willing to fight all along, but Fitz will take no chances of going to jail, and Corbett will not fight without the posting of a side bet on the part of Fitz, which the latter is unable to do. Dan Stuart will make a proposition for the fight, but it is declined before it comes up. He will offer a purse of $20,000 for a fight in Mexico, close to El Paso, post $5,000 forfeit money for each man and guarantee all expenses to which the men may possibly be put, the fight to come off Nov. 9. Julian, he said, in advance, will accept the proposition for Fitz, and Brady said he will consider nothing that does not involve the posting of a side bet of at least $10,000. This kills the last chance of the fight, for the Julian-Fitzsimmons combination could not produce that amount of money to-day and will not say that they can produce it by the 9th. Brady's proposition to fight on a private battle ground for $10,000 a side was his ultimatum and he would not recede from it. If Julian had been able to raise $10,000 it was intended to have the fight in private at Monroe, La., but the poverty of the Fitzsimmons crowd prevented it. Corbett has left for the East, but Fitzsimmons is still at Little Rock.

The Crookston Land office has been doing business at the old stand during the month of October, and the volume is above the average for the year as well as in advance of that for the same month a year ago. The immense crop grown in northern Minnesota this year is taken as a measure of the productiveness of the broad acres, and the extra efforts to become owners of a quarter section of it are apparent at Uncle Sam's headquarters. During the month there were 88 homestead entries filed, 23 final timber culture and six cash entries. This added to the numerous contests which have been heard and the usual office business has make matters unusually lively for both Receiver Anglim and Register Dunlava, as well as their chief clerk, Joseph Smith.

The editor of Farm, Stock & Home takes the following philosophic view of the proposed combination between the G. N. and N. When the railroads of the country are combined and managed by half a dozen men, as they are sure to be in the not distant future then the People will be compelled to insist that the half dozen men to be their servants and not their mators. Tyranny ultimately defeats itself by its own acts; give the calf more rope and it will hang itself. A theory is advanced by those who want to explain and apologize for the low prices of farm products of past year that low cost of transportation is responsible for them. If that theory is good for any thing there should now be a sharp turn-up in prices of grain in the northwest, for the lake rates on grains from Duluth and Chicago are higher than they have been since 1891. It would seem natural that advancing rates of freight would make prices of grain lower, and that position has always been taken by F. S. & H. but if low rates make for low rates make for high prices high rates must have the opposite effect and so we should all begin to demand higher rates instead of insisting upon lower ones. How some of our theory makers escape getting crosseyed and knock-kneed is a marvel F. S & H

In some what notorious "grain rate case" caused by an order of the Minnesota Railroad Commission rs last fall, to the Great Northern railroad to reduce its grain rates and the appeal of the road to the courts, has been decided in favor of the road there by again declaring that the state railway commission has no authority whatever over the freight rates of the state. The court, Judge Kerr, held that an enforcement of the order of the commission would deprive the company of any net returns. How does the judge know that? No railroad commission has yet been able to learn anything more about railroad dividend than railroad officials have seen fit to disclose, then how has this judge learned it? Dividends that this judge is so solicitous about are in excess of interest on stocks and bonds, of course therefore if that interest were not so large the dividends would be larger, and the court might have decided that rates could come down a little without serious injury to the road. Since the interest is very largely on fictitious capital, it follows that without such capital the interest account would be less and rates lower, therefore it is plain to be seen that farmers are paying freight rates on grain that insure a nice interest on mythical capital, on water, or wind, and that without the myth, water or wind his freight rates would be lower and this judge would help him get them! But why this judicial solicitude about railroad earnings? It is probably to preserve sacred and inviolate the principle that no person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law. Well is not compelling the farmer to pay tribute to mythical values depriving him of his property without due process of law? Again if the certainity of dividends is to be insisted upon by courts in deciding cases between railroads and farmers why not consider the dividend of both parties? Is it not quite as just and necessary that farmers be insured dividends as railroads? F. S. & H.

PRINCESS METTERNICH.

A Queer Mixture of Innate High Breeding and Acquired Low Tastes.

In the Princess Metternich was an inexplicable mixture of innate high breeding and acquired tastes of lower degree. When she appeared in society, at her very entrance there could be no mistake. From head to foot she was the high born lady, the grande dame. Yet she had an extraordinary inclination for walking on the edges of moral quagmires and peeping into them, with a proud conviction that her foot could never slip. There are stories of her imprudent adventures, but she escaped unscathed and had no other motive in seeking them than curiosity—foolish, morbid curiosity—as to people and matters which should never have been even mentioned in her presence. She acted with a degree of rashness and folly which would have ruined most women, yet no one ever really attacked her reputation. All allowed that, according to the expression of a lady of the court, "she had never crossed the Rubicon."

Notwithstanding all her follies, the Princess Metternich was far from being silly. On the contrary, she had considerable wit and great sharpness of repartee. As she did not care for anything she said her retorts were often very clever and amusing, but too free to be easily repeated. She delighted in singing songs from music halls and inferior theaters. Haughty as she was, she invited to her dinner table a singer of equivocal celebrity at that time whom no one else would have dared to receive and even took lessons from her so as to sing her songs with duly pointed emphasis.

The mischief done by the example of the Princess Metternich is indescribable. She threw down the barrier which hitherto had separated respectable women from those who were not and led the way to a liberty of speech and liberty of action which were unknown before. She was much attached to her husband and in essentials was a good wife. Others less favorably situated may not have escaped as she did from the natural consequences of looking too closely over the frontier of the debatable land. It is not unlikely that the excessive pride of the Princess Metternich may have led her to imagine that in Paris she might do anything without compromising her dignity. For instance, she was intimate with a lady who, although received everywhere in Parisian society, did not seem to be sufficiently her equal in rank to become her friend. To a remark on the subject she carelessly answered: "Oh, it is all very well here. Of course I could not see her in Vienna."

She is reported to have made a more impertinent speech while on a visit at Compiegne. The short, looped up skirts were just beginning to be worn. The empress had not yet adopted them, and the Princess Metternich had been urging her to do so against the opinion of her ladies. When the empress left the room, one of the ladies in waiting said to the princess, "Would you give the same advice to your empress?"

"Oh, no," replied the princess, "but the case is quite different. The Empress Elizabeth is a real empress."

I have no positive information as to the absolute reliability of this report, but it is not unlike the style of the Princess Metternich and was currently repeated.

On another occasion at Compiegne, in the presence of the empress on a rainy day which had brought some dullness into the circle, the Princess Metternich by way of diversion suddenly seized one of the ladies in waiting, tripped her up in schoolboy fashion and laid her flat on her back prostrate on the floor. This was told me by an eyewitness of the scene, which shocked every one present, and the more so because the victim chosen, the Comtesse de M—, was particularly ladylike, quiet and unoffending.—"Life In the Tuileries Under the Second Empire," by Anna L. Bicknell, in Century.

Anecdotes of Bishop Thorold.

The late Bishop Thorold's crisp notes were proverbial. At the time that the bishop put forward his new church's scheme another scheme was broached by one of the leading clergy in the diocese. The bishop wrote, "Your scheme is excellent, but don't publish it now, or yours will cannon mine, and we shall neither of us get into the pocket."

On another occasion a hardworking South London parson wrote, asking for long leave to go to the Holy Land. His answer was: "My dear ——. By all means. Go to Jericho. Yours, A. W. G."—Westminster Gazette.

Salesman—Shoes? Yes, sir. Give you a pair that will fit you like a glove.

Customer—I never saw the glove that would fit my foot. If it is all the same to you, I'd rather have a pair that will fit me like a shoe.—Boston Transcript.

WHY LATIN IS USED.

A Druggist Tells Why Prescriptions Should Not Be Written in English.

"I don't see," said the man who was leaning against the drug store counter, "why a doctor can't write his prescriptions in English instead of Latin. Suppose my system absolutely requires whisky; that my health and future usefulness to society depend upon it? Well, I go to my doctor and get a prescription. It calls for spiritus frumenti. Now, that ain't what I want. I want whisky. Why can't he come out flat footed and say so? But I suppose he thinks that would be giving the game away. I suppose he would rather I'd take his wisdom with a grain of chloride of sodium than with a grain of salt. Isn't that it?"

The druggist smiled and said: "You've got the same idea most people have. You think, I suppose, that the doctor writes his prescription in Latin so it can't be read so easily—so the layman can't steal his trade and learn what he is giving him. But that's all wrong. In the first place, Latin is a more exact and concise language than English, and being a dead language does not change, as all living languages do.

"Then, again, since a very large part of all the drugs in use are botanical they have in the pharmacopoeia the same names that they have in botany—the scientific names. Two-thirds of such drugs haven't any English names, and so couldn't be written in English.

"But suppose a doctor did write a prescription in English for an uneducated patient? The patient reads it, thinks he remembers it and so tries to get it filled from memory the second time. Suppose, for instance, it called for iodide of potassium, and he got it confused with cyanide of potassium? He could safely take ten grains of the first, but one grain of the second would kill him as dead as a mackerel. That's an exaggerated case, but it will serve for an illustration. Don't you see how the Latin is a protection and a safeguard to the patient? Prescriptions in Latin he can't read and consequently does not try to remember.

"Now for a final reason. Latin is a language that is used by scientific men the world over, and no other language is. You can get a Latin prescription filled in any country on the face of the earth where there is a drug store. We had a prescription come in here the other day which we had put up originally, and which had since been stamped by druggists in London, Paris, Berlin, Constantinople, Cairo and Calcutta. What good would an English prescription be in St. Petersburg?"

"Got any good tooth powder?" asked the man leaning against the counter.—New York Herald.

Domestic Life of the First Consul.

Much of the same policy was still displayed in the official receptions held in the Tuileries. In the first place, the domestic life of the Bonapartes was carefully accented by the presence of the first consul's wife and sisters with their families. No mistresses were ever allowed to flaunt themselves in public under either the consulate or the empire. The same standards of conjugal fidelity were to be supposed valid in the first family of the land as in those of the masses. Then, too, there was displayed a genial familiarity, sometimes even brusque and rude, like that prevalent among the middle class—the good fellowship which they admired above every other quality. Of course there must be ceremonial, and on high occasions the great officers of state, with the diplomatic corps, were arrayed in a circle like that customary in courts from immemorial times. But these latter personages, grand as they were, had to put up with much the same treatment from the first consul while making his rounds as that which his relatives, his state and military officials and the plain people of France generally received at his hands.—"Life of Napoleon," by Professor William M. Sloane, in Century.

Two Compliments.

A lecturer used to tell of two compliments he had received, each of which was, as he said, a "gem" in its way. One day a friend met him on the street, and said cheerfully: "I see that you lectured last night. Sorry I wasn't able to be there. Hope to hear your lecture when it passes into literature." This was different from the tribute paid him by a young man, who, with a grave face and businesslike air, stepped up to the lecturer one night, as he left the platform, shook his hand solemnly, and remarked, with the air of one making a dry statement of facts, "I merely wished to say that you are my favorite writer and speaker," after which he bowed and abruptly disappeared.

She Had Told That Fib Already.

Hood's Sarsaparilla overcame the effects of the grip, cured me of dyspepsia, and nervous prostration. I treated with three different doctors without realizing relief. Lizards One Hundred Feet Long.

One must stretch his fancy almost to the breaking point to imagine a lizard 100 feet in length, but that such creatures formerly existed in the United States there is not the least doubt. The remains of such enormous reptiles have been found in Colorado, Arizona, Oregon, Montana, South Dakota, Maryland, Virginia and the two Carolinas. They belonged to a family of extinct reptiles known to the geologists as dinosaurs, and the remains found in the marl beds of the last four states mentioned above prove that the Western varieties were much larger. Prof. O. C. Marsh of Yale college, found dinosaur remains in Colorado from which he restored a skeleton upward 125 feet in length; the largest found in the Eastern marl beds was less than fifty feet in length.—St. Louis Republic.

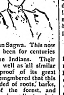
CONSUMPTION.

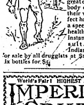
Its Treatment and Cure.

NATURE'S GREATEST REMEDY FOR AN IMPOVERISHED CONDITION OF THE SYSTEM—KICKAPOO INDIAN SAGWA, USED FOR GENERATIONS BY THE INDIANS. THEIR ROBUST CONDITION A NEVER-FAILING ENDORSEMENT FOR THEIR WONDERFUL MEDICINE.

CONSUMPTION has been declared by the leading physicians of the day to be due largely to a condition of the system whereby it becomes impossible to obtain perfect nourishment from food. As soon as the system refuses to receive the necessary life-sustaining elements the patient begins to "lose flesh," and at the same time all of the life-giving organs of the body become weaker and weaker, and gradually failing to perform their natural functions, death is the result.



Sufferers from this most dreaded disease should on experiencing any of the ever accompanying symptoms, such as a general feeling of lassitude, sallow complexion, decrease in weight, sleeplessness, night-sweats, nervousness and susceptibility to colds, immediately take Kickapoo Indian Sagwa. This now famous medicine has been for centuries regularly used by the Indians. Their freeness from this, as well as all similar diseases is ample proof of its great merits. When it is remembered that this is skillfully compounded of roots, barks, gums and herbs of the forest, and contains no poisonous ingredients whatever, it will be seen that no harm can possibly attend its use; and the rapid manner in which it accomplishes its wonderful results will prove to the sufferer that he has found at last that which will give to him a new lease of life.



Kickapoo Indian Sagwa accomplishes its good work by invigorating the stomach, kidneys and liver, purifying the blood and building up the entire system, so that the great organs of the body can perform their work in perfect harmony, and a speedy return to health in every instance will result. Kickapoo Indian Sagwa is for sale by all druggists at $1 a bottle, or six bottles for $5.

EAT TOO MUCH MEAT.

Americans too Prone to the Consumption of Flesh and Fowl.

"We eat altogether too much meat, anyway," said Dr. Cyrus Edison, the health commissioner of New York the other day. "I venture to say that most of the ills we are heir to come from habitual eating of too much beef. If the present era of high prices of beef will only compel people to choose other foods, such as fish or a greater variety of vegetables, the 'beef combine' as it is called, will have been the unconscious instrument of doing a vast amount of good. Fish is much better food for city people than flesh raised on land. It does not contain as great a proportion of those stimulative nutrients that do so much to produce nervousness, indigestion, constipation and the host of attendant disorders to the human body for which the medical profession is so continually called upon to prescribe. Wage workers who earn their living by physical exertion—farm laborers, shovelers, ditch diggers, etc.—require solid foods such as beef and pork, but men and women who take little exercise, whose employment is sedentary, calling for no continual physical strain, fish is eminently more satisfactory as a regular diet. Fish is the coming food. Long after our land has been denuded of those properties that nourish animal life in the field, the waters of the deep will be teeming with fish. The scientific culture of carp has shown conclusively that one acre of water will produce more edible and wholesome flesh than three acres of land, and some of these days we will awaken to the importance of preserving our land sustained animals by the systematic and methodical cultivation of our fish. As to the quantity of meat that a man really needs the people seem to be ignorant. The United States government allows the soldiers but three-quarters of a pound of meat a day. How many New Yorkers, do you suppose, get along with so small a ration of meat? The government, through its physicians, has learned that soldiers, even on the march, do better on that seemingly small allowance than if they were permitted to gorge themselves indiscriminately on the flesh of steers and sheep. New York city allows its hospital patients but one pound of meat a day, and that pound is untrimmed. When cooked and ready to be eaten that pound represents really less than the army ration for able-bodied men. The average energetic, well-fed New Yorker consumes from one and a half to three pounds of meat every day that he is able to eat. It is altogether too much. No wonder that nature rebels frequently and insists that the man live on gruel for whole days at a time. That is nature's own recourse. That's when a man is sick—when he can't eat meat."

THE RETIRED BURGLAR.

He Finds It Hard to Accustom Himself to Ordinary Hours.

"My chief trouble now," said the retired burglar, "is about my hours. I have been so long accustomed to working nights and sleeping days that I find it difficult to change back to the hours of other folks. Instead of having my breakfast at 7 o'clock in the morning I have it at 7 o'clock in the evening. Some folks make their dinner the last meal in the day, but I never could get used to that. I can sleep better on a light meal; so I have my dinner in the middle of the day. I mean the middle of the night, and my supper about 5 o'clock in the morning.

"This schedule works all right for the first half of the night. There's plenty of life then, and I can go to the theater and one place and another, but after dinner, I must say, I find it pretty tedious. When I was at work, and my mind was occupied, I never thought anything about it; but now it is different. This is a bigger town 'n it used to be and it's open all night. There's plenty of occupations nowadays that people work at all night, but the people that work at 'em are working at 'em. You don't see 'em around the streets; and the general fact remains that most people work days and sleep nights; and the cold fact is that from dinner time to supper time I feel sort o' lost. But I'm not discouraged. I don't suppose I could change the habits of a lifetime in a minute, and I shall just keep on trying till I get my hours shifted around again like other people's."

The Use of Naptha.

The greatest care should be observed in the use of naptha, which, while a most valuable agent to clean delicate laces, light silks and ribbons, is a very dangerous liquid. It is so extremely volatile that ignition will take place even when it is removed by the distance across a room from a light, and it never should be used except in the day time. Articles cleansed by this means should be promptly and thoroughly aired. It is a good plan, the Commercial bulletin suggests, when the weather permits, to do the cleaning out of doors, leaving even the thing cleansed outside for a longer airing. The need of this was recently emphasized to an up-town woman, who washed a number of gloves, some laces and ribbons, and fearing to leave them around the room, as she was called away before they were aired, bundled them into a box, which she shut up in a trunk in a closet. Later, she sent a maid to get them out, who took a lighted candle to the closet for the search. When the trunk was opened a slight explosion followed almost immediately. Enough of the gas from the naptha had been generated and held in the confined space to ignite as the candle flame approached. No serious results followed, fortunately, but the warning remains.

Young Men Want Practical Knowledge.

The tendency of young men entering college is decidedly away from the ancient classics, so much so that in twenty years there will be a scarcity of teachers in Latin and Greek. The entries in the freshman class at the University of Wisconsin indicate this tendency in a marked degree. They are as follows:

KLEPTOMANIA FAST DYING OUT.

Fad That Ran a Swift Course Seldom Found Now by Big Storekeepers.

There is growing evidence that kleptomania was a fad. The attempt to classify it somewhere among the psychological mysteries will not hold in the face of the experience of a State street merchant, who knows how to observe and has plenty of opportunity to indulge his knowledge. He said:

"It's a funny thing to me, but it is certainly true, there has been a marked falling off in kleptomania in the last year. I noticed it in my store, and for a time thought little of it. One day another merchant on the street said he had found the same thing, and then I began to inquire. All had the same story to tell, kleptomania was becoming extinct.

"This doesn't mean," he continued, "that people are becoming any better or that they are stealing less, for, as to that, the returns are about the same year in and year out. What I refer to is the petty thievery by people who do not need what they steal and in many instances do not know what to do with the things after they get them. For a time, a couple of years ago, there was such a flood of that sort of robbery in the stores that the proprietors were about driven to despair. You can imagine the predicament of being confronted by a woman whom you know to be wealthy and of good social standing and yet know she has secreted in her muff or under her cape a piece of silk or other fabric from the counter. When you meet an indignant denial it is hard to go on and force a search. That thing grew to be so common that in most of the big stores one woman was kept fairly busy searching the kleptomaniacs who were brought back to her."

"Did you arrest them?"

"No, except in rare cases. We employed detectives of both sexes to watch for them. When a woman was seen taking anything from a counter the detective would approach her and ask her to step to the rear of the store, as the proprietor wished to see her. The request was made with such politeness that the woman would not be sure it was for the theft, and in nearly every instance would comply at once. Then it was a simple matter; the article stolen would be found, the woman would resort to tears, explain she did not mean to take it, had acted on impulse, and all that sort of thing, and offer to pay for it, and generally show an abundance of money. We would seldom press the case any farther. Some of these women became such slaves of the fad that they were watched always when they came to the stores. The kleptomaniacs were the most difficult thieves to guard against, for they bore no outward sign of their affliction. The ordinary thief, who steals to sell again, can be more easily marked and guarded against.

"But it is dying out, and in the last year there have been only rare cases of kleptomania discovered in Chicago. I have come to think it was more of a fad than an affliction, adopted by a certain class, who liked the excitement of trying to steal a thing without getting caught, and yet secure from prosecution or publicity, if they should be caught, by their ability to pay for what they stole."

MESABA MINES AGAIN DISAPPOINT THEIR OWNERS.

Some of the Actual Results of the Iron Mining Season of 1895.

The owners of the Mesaba iron mines in St. Louis county have fared badly for the past two years, most of the time conducting their business at a loss. Last year heavy losses were suffered by the capitalists who own the mines. They entered upon the present season with rosy hopes. The season's ore was sold in the months of April and May, as usual, at prices ranging from $1.80 to $2.50 per ton, according to the quality of the ore. The advance in the price did not take place until July, August and September, long after all the season's ores had been disposed of by contract for future delivery. The miners in contracting their ore for the season figured on 80 cents as the cost of lake freights, but lake freights have advanced in an unprecedented way, and are now and for some time past have been ruling at $1.50 per ton, so that much of the ore that was sold for from $1.80 to $2.50 is being delivered in vessels which cost the mines $1.50 per ton. A mine selling its ore in the early part of the season, for say $2.25 to $2.50 per ton, must now pay $1.50 per ton for lake freights, leaving only 75 cents to $1 for mining and for rail freights to Duluth. As the rail freight alone is 80 cents and the commission, insurance, interest, etc., 20 cents, it will be seen that the cost of mining is a dead loss and the ore is given away. The rosy hopes of the spring, therefore, have met only disappointment, and the miners are now figuring with much anxiety on the net results of the year's operation.

An Electrical Fish.

Among the fishes which are capable of giving severe electrical shocks the torpedo, or electric ray, a member of the skate tribe, stands out prominently. This fish has a couple of complex batteries lodged in the sides of its headparts and the discharge of these organs is fraught with dire effects to the animals which may chance to come in the way of this living magazine. The electricity is generated by the nervous system; that is to say, so much nerve force when passed through or into the electrical organ is converted into electricity. Prof. d'Arsonval of the College of France tells us that in the case of a torpedo measuring in diameter thirty centimeters the shock given by this animal amounted to twenty volts. He lighted up several electrical lamps by the discharge from the fish and this discharge was powerful enough in some cases to carbonize the lamps. It is said that a powerful torpedo may give a discharge measuring 120 volts. This of course is more than sufficient to kill prey of ordinary size.—Chicago Daily News.

Pocket Electricity.

A correspondent asks if it is not practicable for a person to carry enough electricity and use it for the purpose of heating the body by means of electric heating apparatus placed under the clothing. We presume it is. A few 200-ampere-hour cells scattered among the pockets, connected in series, ought to do the business. They would probably weigh 500 pounds or more, and to this must be added the weight of the heat apparatus. The latter need not necessarily be in the form of a street car heater; it could be spread out on a flat surface. It would not look well, for instance, to carry a box-shaped heater across the stomach. Care must be taken to prevent short-circuiting, which might result in roasting to death.—Electrical Age.

Telling Fortunes With Apples.

There are three fortunes to be told with an apple. Peel the fruit without breaking the skin, and, holding the long spiral skin daintily by the end, swing it three times around the head, and let it fall to the ground; whatever letter the skin then forms is the initial of the sweetheart or friend who loves you best. Then, before eating your apple, have some one "name it," as they say, and after you have saved all the seeds, begin to count them thus:

One I love; two I love; three I love
 I say;
Four I love with all my heart
And five I cast away.
Six, she loves; seven, he loves; eight,
 both love.
Nine, he comes; ten, he tarries.
Eleven, he courts, and twelve he marries.

A more amusing fortune is that of placing a fresh apple seed on each eyelid and naming each; The one which remains there longest is the truest and best. A famous custom consists of pouring a very little molten lead into a tub of cold water; there follows a splashing and hissing as the lead cools suddenly, and the shape of the lead reveals the future. Just as in all oracles, ever since the days of Delphi and Diana of the Ephesians, the scientific work lies in reading the doubtful forecasts aright.—"Reading the Book of Fate," by Louise Willis Snead in St. Nicholas.

The Sleeping Apple.

High up in a tree among the green leaves, hung a rosy-cheeked apple that was so still it seemed to be sleeping. A little child came near, and, standing under the tree, she looked up and called to the apple: "O apple! come to me! do come down to me! You do not need to sleep so long!"

But the apple did not waken.

Then came the bright sun; high in the heavens he shone.

"O Sun! lovely Sun!" said the child. "Please waken the apple for me?"

The sun said: "O yes, I will, with pleasure." So he sent his bright beams straight in the face of the apple, and kissed it kindly, but the apple did not move a bit.

Then came a bird and perched upon the bough of a tree and sang a beautiful song; but even that did not waken the sleeping apple.

And what came now The wind, to be sure. "I wonder what he will do!" said the child. "I know he will not kiss the apple and he cannot sing to it, so he will have to try another way."

And the wind did try another way. He puffed out his cheeks and blew and blew and shook the tree, and the rosy-cheeked apple woke, and was so frightened that it gave a sudden jump and fell right in the uplifted apron of the little girl.

And "I thank you very much, Mr. Wind," she said, as she ran away with it.

Kept His Word.

An examiner at Edinburgh university had made himself obnoxious by warning the students against putting their hats on his desk. The university in the Scottish capital is remarkable for the scarcity of cloak rooms, and in the excitement of examinations hats are, or used to be, flung down anywhere.

The examiner announced one day that if ever he found another hat on his desk he would rip it up. The next day no hats were laid there when the students assembled. Presently, however, the examiner was called out of the room. Then some naughty undergraduate slipped from his seat, got the examiner's own hat and placed it on his desk. When the examiner reentered the hall every eye was fixed upon him. He observed the hat and a gleam of triumph shot across his face.

"Gentlemen," he said, "I told you what would happen if this occurred again." Then he took his penknife from his pocket, opened it, and blandly cut the hat in pieces, amidst prolonged applause. What he said when he discovered that he had destroyed his own hat the story does not say.—Harper's Round Table.

Ethel's Protest.

Little Ethel is just two years and two weeks of age, and the dignity of such maturity she had deemed it expedient to maintain by the strictest attention to her attire; therefore, when her tiny shoes, through an unavoidable combination of circumstances, had been sent to the cobbler to have the ravages done to the toes rectified, and she was supplied with a dilapidated pair for such an emergency, she viewed the whole proceeding with ill-suppressed anxiety and deep disgust, but forebore much outward demonstration.

Next morning, when she found she was about to suffer the same infliction, she entered an indignant protest, and exclaimed, with warmth and aggravation: "Patens, me, mamma; don't put dem wagged soos on me no more, for pitty take!"

New Standard of Light.

Mr. Violle, says the Revue Industrielle, has undertaken some researches upon acetylene that have led to the manufacture of a standard lamp that fulfills all the conditions required by the ordinary photometric measurements. Upon burning the gas meter under a slight pressure in a burner in which it is properly aerated and that spreads it out into a wide, thin sheet, Mr. Violle obtains a steady and very luminous flame of remarkable whiteness and of uniform clearness over quite a wide surface. In front of this flame he places a screen provided with an aperture that varies according to requirements, and obtains a source whose steadiness and brightness, comparable with those of the absolute standard, make a practical standard of it.

Trimming Lamp on a Bicycle.

The municipal lighting plant at Edinburg, Scotland, furnishes current for 150 arc lamps for street lighting. The turning out of these lamps, which are on the same mains as the incandescent lights, was done by hand. The time formerly occupied was nearly two hours, when the attendant went around on foot. But a man is now sent on a bicycle, and does the work in half an hour. The city finds that by thus lessening the time of unnecessary use of current and consumption of carbons it is saving $200 worth of electricity every year.

Simple Enough.

"This predicting the weather is mighty easy," said the skeptic.

"Could you do it?"

"Certainly. All you have to do is to predict a hot wave when it's cold and a cold wave when it's hot, and stick to it."—Washington Star.

Marriage Rate of College Women.

The marriage of college women is a subject that has lately called out many statistics and much subsequent speculation.

Miss Millicent W. Shinn has been carefully gathering together statistics from the women's colleges in America, and she finds that the ultimate probability of a college woman's marriage is below 55 per cent, as against 90 per cent for other women—not quite two-thirds as great.

College women marry most in the Middle West, and least in the North Atlantic states, and Miss Shinn declares that the reason is not that they crave a public life, but largely because they are employed as teachers in girls' schools, a station in life more inimical to marriage than any other save that of a nun.

Deafness Can Not Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When the tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

A CRISIS IN TURKEY.

THE SULTAN IS SETTING OVER A POLITICAL VOLCANO.

Turks May Soon Be Face to Face With an Open and Widespread Revolt Against the Rule of the Sultan—Disaffection in the Army and Navy.

Constantinople, Nov. 9.—The former Turkish minister of foreign affairs, Said Pasha, promised to give the ambassadors of the powers a definite reply within two days as to what steps the porte intends to take for the restoration of order in Armenia and to provide for protection of Christians in that part of the Turkish empire.

This was the point especially alluded to by the ambassadors on Tuesday last when they called seperately and represented that the present state of affairs in Armenia could not be allowed to continue, and that if a definite measure was not shortly taken to bring about the restoration of order, the powers would be compelled, acting in concert, to take their own steps in the matter. No combined action of such grave importance upon the part of the powers has been taken for years past and the fact that the porte was reminded of the intervention of the powers in Syria at the time of the massacre of 1860 is considered as a direct warning to the sultan that Europe will intervene to restore order in Armenia unless the Turkish government acts promptly.

As each day passes, however, the situation becomes more and more alarming and adds to the difficulty of the task before the porte and possibly before the European powers. From Syria especially the most disquieting rumors are coming and that they are based on facts is shown by the mobilization of twenty battalions of Redifs, out of the sixty available, and the steps being taken to dispatch them as promptly as possible to that portion of Asiatic Turkey. This lends color to the report that the Armenians are receiving support from unexpected sources and that the Turkish government may soon be face to face with an open and widespread revolt against the

According to the Turks.

Washington, Nov. 9.—The Turkish legation announces the following telegram from the Sublime Porte under yesterday's date:

"All news concerning plots, threatening letters and a supposed dissatisfaction in the ranks of the army and navy is intentionally propagated by well known newspaper correspondents, affiliated with the Armenian committee, to alarm public opinion. As for the often repeated assertion of the intended extermination of the Armenians, it is too absurd to be contradicted. The efforts of the imperial government tend on the contrary to quell the revolt of the Armenians and to resist their criminal and bloody agitation.

"The Armenian agitation at Diarbekir was on the point of subsiding when the Armenians began again their attacks upon the Mussulman's by throwing bombs at them, and by firing at the Muezzins at the very time when the latter were calling the faithful to prayers. During the affray fifty Mussulman's and ninety Armenians were killed and wounded. Armenian rioters attacked the patrols at Sivrik killing a few Mussulman's and setting fire to the bazaar. Two hundred Armenian revolutionists, having at their head Kevrok, chief of the parish of erus (Marash) attacked the village of Tchoukour Hissar and killed twelve Mussulmans. Some of the agitators were arrested, including part of the Armenian brigands who captured Hadji Hassan Oglou Husni. All news published as to the occurrence of trouble at Adana, Tarsus and Mersine, is absolutely without foundation."

Constantinople, Nov. 10.—There is no change for the better in the political situation here unless it rests upon the fact that the Ottoman bank has advanced the Turkish government the sum of $1,500,000, which will enable the new minister of finance, Sabri Pasha to provide for the most pressing needs of the government. The latter, it would seem, consist in fitting out the army reserves just called out in the porte's attempt to make some show of trying to restore order in Armenia, but there are so many other demands upon the Turkish treasury at the present moment that the money just advanced will not go a long way even if it were placed to legitimate uses, which is not likely to be the case. In the best informed circles here the situation is regarded as decidedly critical, and important developments are expected within a short time. The ambassadors of the powers do not regard the new Turkish ministry with favor; it is not expected to last long, and it is thought that it will be able to do nothing worth mentioning toward clearing the political atmosphere. The rumors of palace conspiracies continue to be bruited about. The name of the deposed sultan Mohammed Murad, removed from the throne because he was alleged to be suffering from idiocy, is once more mentioned as being a likely candidate for the throne. There are many who believe that the deposed sultan is fully as sane as the present ruler of the empire, Abdul Medji. Then, of course, the name of the heir apparent, Mohammed Reshed, is heard mentioned as likely to shortly succeed his uncle, the present sultan, but that report has been in circulation for months past. In fact, is was said some time ago that the present sultan had half-offered to resign in favor of Mohammed Reshed, but, it is added, the representatives of the powers did not look upon this as likely to prove any solution of the complicated situation, and the matter was allowed to drop. The difficulty does not rest in individuals. One sultan is about as bad or good as another. It is the system of government in the Turkish empire which is to blame for all the trouble, and until there is a decided change in this direction there will be no improvement in the condition of the Armenians, or of the Turks.

Further private reports received here from Diarbekir estimate the number of Armenian victims of the recent massacres at 5,000. It is believed that the number is in excess of the actual total of those killed, but there seems to be no doubt that the victims are numbered by the thousands.

Death and Ruin.

London, Nov. 12.—Advices received by the Chronicle from Constantinople are to the effect that a consul has just arrived there and that he describes the whole country from Erzeroum and Trebizond as being completely devastated. Every Armenian town and village is in ruins. Heaps of unburied bodies are found everywhere.

A Turkish official states that the trouble originated at Erzeroum with an attack on the government house, caused by the torture of prisoners. Petroleum was freely used for the purpose of setting fire to the houses of the Armenians. According to the Chronicle advices, the patriarch intends to send a pastoral letter to the churches to-morrow, announcing the sultan's promised reforms, and counseling patience on the part of all his Armenian followers.

The Vienna correspondent of the Telegraph says that news from Constantinople indicates that even the foreigners are in danger, and that the central European powers have decided to employ energetic measures to defend the lives and property of their subjects.

A dispatch to the Times from Constantinople says that as proof that the Armenian massacres are ordered from the yildiz kiosk, not necessarily with the sultan's knowledge, but by influential men of the palace party, anxious to discredit the administration of Kiamil Pasha, recently grand vizier, the instance of Diarbekir is worth citing. M. Cambon, the French ambassador, after learning of the two days' rioting at Diarbekir, threatened to hold Alexandrietta with the French squadron until the resignation of the governor had been brought about. Two hours after this threat reached the yildiz kiosk, Diarbekir was tranquil. The Times correspondent says that this is an eloquent fact explaining the situation, and that many smaller instances point the same way.

The diplomatic corps consider the lives of Christians endangered throughout all the Asiatic provinces, but it is not believed that they are in any especial danger at Constantinople, because the members of the palace clique are not likely to initiate any anti-Christian movements, and the members of the Mahommedan constitutional party advocate the adoption of a policy giving Christians a share in the government. The natural tendency in consequence is the condition of the Mahommedan constitutional party with the Armenians, and, in fact, there are signs indicating that such a coalition would be likely to occur under circumstances in any degree favorable. It is believed at Constantinople that the new ministry will not live over to-morrow.

RUSSIA GIVES GUNS.

Northwestern Chinese Rebels Are Backed by the Czar.

London, Nov. 12.—Special dispatches received here from Shanghai say that the rebel Dungans in the northwest of China are mostly armed with rifles of Russian manufacture. It is added that their leader, while maintaining iron discipline among his followers, accords foreigners benevolent protection. He has sent a sort of ultimatum to the imperial government announcing his intention of advancing on Pekin should the answer prove unfavorable. The rebels are said to number over 60,000 men, and the imperial forces are said to be utterly incapable of resistance, and to be committing excesses in the territory under their control. Whole towns and villages are said to have been subjected to rapine and the fields in their neighborhood are said to be littered with corpses of men, women and children.

St. Paul, Nov. 12.—Michael Cioffredi, living with his family on Fauquier street, went violently insane last night and had to be locked up in the county jail. He had had attacks of insanity before, and spent some time at the Rochester asylum. For the past three days he had been ailing, but a return to his insanity was not expected. He began to rave suddenly, and, when his son attempted to quiet him, bit him on the arm. Officer Ryan was called in and succeeded in subduing him. The wagon from the Margaret street police station conveyed the old man to the county jail.

SPANIARDS CHARGED WITH HIGH-HANDED PROCEEDINGS.

An American Vessel Is Boarded by a Spanish Officers and Several Soldiers Who Ransack the Boat in Search of Arms for Cubans.

New York, Nov. 12.—The American brig, Harriet G., arrived at Quarantine to-day from Nuevitas, Cuba. The Harriet G. is owned by Mosle Bros. of this city, and trades regularly between New York and Nuevitas. She sailed from this port on Aug. 29 last and reached Nuevitas on Sept. 19, where she discharged her cargo. On Oct. 3 a Spanish officer with several soldiers boarded the brig and made a thorough search for a large quantity of arms which the Spanish officials had been informed were on board the vessel. The brig was ransacked from stem to stern, but no arms were found.

The Spanish officer went so far as to demand that Capt. Miller remove from below all his anchor chains. This the captain refused to do and the officers were reluctantly forced to leave the vessel. The United States consul was on board at the time but could do nothing. Capt. Miller will report the facts of the search of his vessel to the proper authorities at Washington.

There was on board the Harriet G. a young Cuban passenger named Gustava Torre, who said that he was so persecuted by the Spanish authorities that he was compelled to leave the island and come to the United States.

A Nebraska Murder.

Beaver City, Neb., Nov. 12.—Albert Applegate was murdered in his corn field near Wilsonville yesterday. The assassin is unknown, but is supposed to be from Denver. He first appeared in the neighborhood yesterday at the house of John Nelson, a brother-in-law of Applegate. In a few minutes four shots were heard and Applegate was found near the corn field in which he was at work, with a bullet through the head, which had produced instant death. Indications are that Applegate had started toward his assassin when he first discovered him. The men had clinched after three shots were fired. The fourth and fatal one left powder stains on the face of the murdered man. A posse started in pursuit, but have not overtaken him. Applegate had estranged the affections of the wife of a man in Denver who is said to be the assassin.

He Shot Miss Maude.

Nebraska City, Neb., Nov. 12.—Last night at 1:30 Tom Maher, a well known character about town, shot and fatally wounded Miss Maude Fessler. The shooting occurred at a distance. Maher had been drinking heavily and became enraged at the sight of Maude Fessler preparing to go home under the escort of another man. He pulled his revolver and shot her twice, the fatal bullet entering just beneath the shoulder blade. Fred Plattner received two bullets in his cheek while attempting to disarm Maher. Maher jumped through a window, but was run down by an officer and placed in jail.

This Is Flying.

Galesburg, Ill., Nov. 12.—What the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy officials here term a phenomenal run was made by a passenger train this morning. The distance from here to Mendota, eighty miles, was covered in eighty minutes, including five stops and two slow-ups. Supt. Rice estimates that the stops and slow-ups caused a loss of twenty minutes. This makes the actual running time sixty minutes, or at the rate of eighty miles an hour. This is the banner run for the Burlington route. The same train covered the same distance last week in eighty-five minutes.

Too Late for Concessions.

New York, Nov. 12.—C. G. Veley, a Cuban who has been in Spain on a mission in the interest of the insurgent case, arrived in New York to-day on the steamer Veendam. He said that he expects to lead an expedition to Cuba in the near future. His father, he said, is in Paris, where he is doing good work in the cause of Cuban independence. Mr. Veley gave it as his opinion that it is now too late for the Spanish government to offer concessions to the struggling Cubans, as the insurgents are in good condition and expect seen the consummation of their hopes in a Cuban republic.

The Meehans have won their case in the U. S. Court against Rev. W. Jones Judge R. R. Nelson rendering a decision in their favor. The Republicans of 1895 have captured nearly everything in sight. Only three short years and the Democrats were celebrating over a similar victory. The result clearly shows that there is a spirit of unrest among the voters and they have voted against the party in power to show non-approval of existing state of affairs. It now seems probable that the Republicans will win next year. They claim that a high protective tariff is a specific that will cure all of our political ills. If this be true their success is assured; but if on the other hand it is as others claim the financial question that needs attention and not the tariff then the Republican will split upon the same rocks as have the Democrats and go to pieces equally as bad.

The Very Latest.

A large assortment of Ladies' Misses and Children Jackets and Cloaks will arrive in a few days at E. M. Hoff store. All which are of the latest designs, and from the largest and best known cloak manufacturing firm in the country.

The county commissioners have appointed Martin O'Brien as special counsel to assist County Attorney Gossman in the trial of the case brough by the county against the St. Paul Minneapolis & Manitoba railroad company to tax their land grants in this county, which comes up at the next term of court in December. The company has a great deal of land in Polk county which has been untaxed since the land was granted to it by the state in 1872. A great deal of this land has been disposed of, but there still remains a quantity which would net the county a handsome sum each year if it were listed and taxable. As long as it remains untaxable the company does not make any special effort to dispose of the lands and the county suffers accordingly. The county has a hard fight on its hands, but there is a chance of winning, and every tax payer applauds their action in bringing the suit.—Crookston Tribune.

Just what advantage the Ives-Meehan combination expect to gain by their silly opposition to the river improvements proposed by Mr. Kratka's new company is not quite plain. It is a known fact that the river from here to St. Hilaire is in a condition which renders the driving of logs next to impossible and wholly impracticable and to correct these difficulties would involve an outlay of upward of $50,000 and an additional expenditure of from five to fifteen thousand dollars, according to the amount of timber handled It is also a well known fact that the greatest difficulties lie between here and a point about two miles below. If the Kratka company build a dam across the river a mile below It will certainly correct all incumberances above it to this place. This would be a saving to the St. Hilaire combination of at least $25,000. If the above named combination are smart they will see the matter in this light. If not they will keep on their senseless talk and unavailing opposition which however, does not seem to worry any one but themselves.—Thief River Falls Press.

We are under many obligations to Editor Ware for his unselfish remarks in our behalf. We wish however to inform Mr. Ware and all others interested that there is no combination between the Meehans and H. E. Ives or any one connected with the St. Hilaire Boom & Water Power Co. This company is abundantly able to protect and care for its property and will do so notwithstanding the unsought for advice of so eminent an authority on river navigation as Editor Ware.

THE HOUR BEFORE DAYBREAK.

There's a weird, uncanny hour,
 When the veil 'twixt life and death
Seems so thin its folds are shaken
 By the night wind's chilling breath.
In that time of deepest darkness,
 Have you ever lain awake
While nature takes her soundest nap,
 Ere the morn begins to break?

One can hear (at least in fancy)
 Stealthy footsteps, here and there,
And rustling sounds, like countless wings,
 Faintly stirring everywhere,
As though the elves of darkness
 Were preparing for their flight,
And the bustle of departure
 Fills this mystic hour of night.

Then sleep and death stand waiting,
 Where the night lamp flickers dim,
And death creeps nearer to the couch,
 With presence cold and grim,
Where watchers count, with bated breath,
 The pulse beats, faint and slow,
And, trembling, breathe their hopes and fears
 In anxious whispers low.

But hark! Young morning seems to yawn,
 With a lusty stretch and shake,
The air throbs with the welcome sound,
 And nature is awake.
Sleep drops a kiss on weary eyes
 Where death has missed his prey,
And rosy heralds in the east
 Proclaim the break of day.

Sarcasm on the Bench.

Some years ago there lived in Alabama a judge who was noted for the sarcasm which he dispensed during his administration of justice. On one occasion a young man was tried for stealing a pocketbook. The next case was for murder. The evidence in the larceny case was slight, but in the other seemed to the judge conclusive. To his amazement and wrath, however, the jury convicted the young man and acquitted the murderer. In passing sentence upon the convicted thief, after the discharge of the other prisoner, the judge said, "Young man you have not been in this country long?" "No, your honor," replied the prisoner. "I thought not," said the judge. "You don't know these people. You may kill them, but don't touch their pocketbooks."

On another occasion, when the evidence seemed to point conclusively to the prisoner's guilt, but when the judge, from long experience, distrusted the jurymen's wisdom, the counsel for the defendant said, "It is better that 99 guilty persons should escape than that one innocent man should suffer." In his charge to the jury the judge admitted the soundness of this proposition, but he added impressively and severely, "Gentlemen, I want you to bear in mind that 99 have already escaped."—San Francisco Argonaut.

What Boulanger Was Up To.

Herr Kraus gives in his reminiscences of the late Maxime du Camp the following hitherto unpublished anecdote, showing how the French writer succeeded in getting from Boulanger a confession of his intended policy. It is worth giving: At the time when Boulanger's star was in its zenith a lady friend of Du Camp was invited to a dinner where she was to be the general's neighbor. She asked Du Camp how she was to manage with the minister of war. He instructed her to wait for a fitting moment, and when she saw the wine and woman loving general at that stage when truth will out to whisper the question: "What will you do when you are emperor?" The would be dictator fell into the trap and answered, "Eh bien, je ferai la noce!" which may be rendered into corresponding slang by, "I'll have a jolly spree!"—Scottish Review.

Cruelty.

"Oh, dear," sobbed Mrs. Hunnimune, "I knew it would come to this, but I didn't expect it so soon."

"Has your husband been mistreating you?" asked her visitor solemnly.

"Y-yes," she sobbed. "He says I want my own way all the time."

"And won't he let you have it?"

"That's the worst of it. He says that he doesn't care if I have my own w-way all the time, b-but that I won't make up my mind wh-what it is."—Washington Star.

PAYING A CHURCH DEBT.

A Congregation In the Mountains Where Cash Was Scarce.

"Brethen," said the minister solemnly, "we have a debt of 15 cents. How shall we raise it?"

The good deacons looked around the church inquiringly, and one or two of them shook their heads with a discouraged air. The mountain breeze, cool even though it was midsummer, wafted in through the open church door, and it was so quiet after the pastor's announcement that you could hear the bumblebees in the honeysuckle around the quaint old entrance.

It was a little hamlet up in the Catskills, not far from that summer resort called Gilboa, which ten years ago, before the advent of the summer boarder, was a metropolis compared to this quiet little village. The congregation was made up of farmers who still clung to the agricultural idea, and who were too plodding to realize that, while tilling soil was profitable, tilling the gaunt, gray rocks and bowlders of the mountain could never be aught but drudgery without reward. Hard cash was a thing almost unknown to these toilers of the hills. They were more primitive than the American Indians, who, unvexed by the silver question, at least had wampum as the coin of the realm.

But even without this were these Catskill mountain farmers. They paid all their bills in their slender crops. A little corn, tenderly nurtured in the niches between great stones; a few acres of hay, mowed with the scythe on the steep mountain slope, and a few vegetables in the more fertile ground near their cottages—these were their bills of exchange for their groceries and rare purchases of "store clothes." They had solved thoroughly the problem of barter. To their minister they did manage, by hook and crook, to give a few dollars each year. The rest of his salary they paid in firewood; great loads of hickory hewn far up among the waving tree tops of the Summit mountain, carted over the rough timber paths and heaped up, a huge rampart, along the side of the parsonage.

It was not altogether surprising, therefore, in view of these circumstances, that an announcement like that of the minister should actually be made, as was the case: "Brethren, we have a debt of 15 cents. How shall we raise it?"

To the good minister on this summer morning a decade ago this was a serious matter. Without exaggeration he felt that the church, even if not threatened with actual bankruptcy, was at least a heavy debtor. His congregation thought so too. Not a few sighed and shook their heads dubiously.

The plate was passed, and the writer, who came from a great and wealthy city, put in exactly 15 cents. After the collection the plate was immediately taken up to the pulpit, and the minister began to count the money, so as to announce the result of his appeal.

"Brethren and sisters," he said, and his voice shook a little, "the Lord has been generous to us beyond our seeking or deserving. We have 20 cents. If the bountiful giver wishes to take back anything above the amount of our debt, the opportunity is now offered. We would not wish to take advantage of God's providence more than is absolutely needful."—New York Tribune.

Bread and Butter.

Many physicians, according to a lecturer on dietetics, are ordering thin bread and butter for delicate patients, especially those suffering from dyspepsia, consumption and anæmia, or any who need to take on flesh. This thin bread and butter insensibly induces persons to eat much more butter than they have any idea of. It is extraordinary, says the lecturer, how short a way a pat of fresh butter will go if spread on a number of thin slices of bread. This is one advantage, and a great one, in the feeding of invalids, for they are thereby provided with an excellent form of the fat which is so essential for their nutrition, in a way that lures them on to take it without rebellion. But the thin bread and butter has another advantage, equally great. It is very digestible and easily assimilated. Fresh butter made from cream is very much more digestible when spread upon thin slices of bread than the same amount of cream eaten as cream per se, would be.—New York Times.

She Parried.

"No, Edward," she answered, "never!"

He staggered, as under a blow.

"No, Edward."

Was she giving him the marble heart?

No.

One swift look, with eyes whose glance love made yet more searching, told him she did not mean what she said.

"Darling!" he cried.

In short, she had simply given him the plaster of paris heart.—Detroit Tribune.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally, in doses from ten drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer One Hundred Dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address

AMONG THE LEAVES.

The near sky, the under sky,
The low sky that I love!
I lie where fallen leaves lie,
With a leafy sky above;
And draw the colored leaves nigh,
And push the withered leaves by,
And feel the woodland heart upon me brooding like a dove.

The bright sky, the shifting sky,
The sky that autumn weaves,
I see where scarlet leaves fly,
The sky the wind bereaves;
I see the lingering leaves die,
I hear the dying leaves sigh,
And breathe the woodland breath made sweet by all her withered leaves.

—Youth's Companion.

THE FINDING OF A HEART.

It was not the sort of a day one would look for in New England the last week in December. The thermometer stood at 52 degrees and the sun fell warmly on the bare, wet earth, drawing up little breaths of vapor on the sunny slopes. There was a look of weariness on the face of nature, as if the quiet were the coma of exhaustion. It certainly was a reaction; for twenty-four hours the rain had fallen in torrents, breaking up the ice and choking the streams; the wind had been almost a gale, and field and highway were strewn with evidences of the storm's power.

At the gate of a handsome house stood its owner, Mr. Ambrose Winchester, accounted one of the wealthiest men in the town. He seemed to be taking in the magnitude of the storm as his eye swept over his domain from the thrifty orchids in the rear and the woodland beyond to the smooth meadows in front, where a miniature river seemed to have sprung into existence.

A young man in a buggy drove up and stopped.

"Good morning, Mr. Winchester," said he.

"Good morning, Hutton," said the other, gruffly.

"I've driven over this morning, Mr. Winchester, to ask you to extend the time on that payment; I've done my best to raise the money——"

"It don't matter, Hutton. I've made up my mind to foreclose that property."

Hutton grew pale.

"Surely, you wouldn't do that!" There was an entreaty in his voice and eyes. "You know the factory shut down to half time all summer; even at that I was saving toward the payment when my wife's long illness began. Doctor and nurse bills ate up what I'd saved for you."

"Same old story! A man has no right to get married until he can support a family, doctor's bills and all. I've no sympathy with such nonsense. People marry on nothing, and then expect other people to support their families. Sooner they find out it can't be done, the better. Now, I take good care of my family without anybody else's help, and I always expect to. If you can't do as much, then it's your fault, not mine. See? I shall foreclose, and now let us have no more words about it."

With this, the farmer strode into the house, the young man driving on slowly, with bowed head. The farmer's little girls, Ruth and Mabel, came dancing out, and their mother followed them into the porch. "Now, be sure and leave grandma's at 4 o'clock, so as to get here before dark."

"Yes, mamma, we will," they responded glibly, and started off on a run.

Grandma Winchester lived about a mile away, on an unfrequented road, but the children had made the trip often since they were quite small. So now they chatted happily along the familiar path, possessed with a childish interest in everything around them, even to the washouts the rain had made in the road and gutters. But when they neared Blue Creek, they stood in sheer surprise.

The little summer brook they had sometimes waded across had grown to an angry torrent, and overflowed its steep banks and was rushing madly along, bearing ice, foam and branches of trees. In fact, a tree had lodged against the bridge, and its limbs so nearly covered it that it was difficult for our little travelers to get across.

"Oh, how the bridge trembles!" cried little Mabel.

"It's all this ice pushing against it," said Ruth.

The wind began to rise, and the blue gray clouds settled down, darkly obscuring the sun, which had made the day seem so fair. The children shivered in unison with the change, and quickened their pace.

At 5 o'clock that afternoon the two little girls stood appalled at the Blue Creek crossing. The brook had swollen still more, and was now a raging torrent; the place spanned by the bridge was the narrowest, and the narrow planks, with the frail side railings, held to each bank as if by a thread.

"See, Mabel; we must hurry," said Ruth, "or our bridge will be gone. Take my hand, and we'll run across quick."

"I'm awful 'fraid," said the child, with quivering lips.

"Well, I'll go first," said her sister, encouragingly, "and you'll see how easy it will be. Now, then, one—two—three!" and clasping hands the two little girls started to run across the reeling bridge. Perhaps it was their weight; perhaps it was at that very moment the fastenings were ready to give way. But certain it was that when they reached the middle of the bridge it snapped its connections at each side and with lightning velocity shot down the stream, the little ones clinging to each other and the hand rail.

The frightful speed at which they were going, together with the awful roar of the water, and the suddenness with which the whole thing came about, gave the children no chance to feel the extreme terror that their hazardous position would naturally have inspired; they had only one thought, only one instinctive feeling, and that was to cling with a deathlike grip to the bridge and each other. It was reserved for the spectator to the scene, who arrived on a little knoll that commanded a view of the whole transaction just as it occurred, to experience the full agony of their terrible situation. This was their father, Ambrose Winchester.

Like one gone mad he ran desperately along the bank after the small bark, his eyes fixed on the two little swaying figures, dark brown and flaxen curls, mingling as they were tossed by the wind, until a small patch of woodland cut off his view. Still he ran, muttering cries, prayers, until his breath gave out, and his gasping throat could only give vent to something like sobs.

When he passed the little patch of woodland he saw the bridge had stopped, caught by the branches of a tree fallen across the stream. But the bridge itself was ready to fall to pieces now; the rail to which the children hung was swaying and bending and threatening every moment to part company with the rest of the structure. At that moment a figure plunged boldly into the torrent with a long board in his arms, and before the reeling, breathless father could gain the spot, had taken both children upon the board, and was struggling toward the shore. Mr. Winchester was just in time to catch his dripping children as they came to land, and as his eyes fell on their deliverer he saw it was Hutton.

"Here, put the children into my buggy and wrap them in the robe," he gasped. Then, following them, he drove off at a breakneck speed without a backward glance.

Mrs. Winchester came to the door with an inquiring look. When Mr. Hutton lifted in his arms the half inanimate forms of her children and handed them to her, one by one, she grew ashy pale.

"Oh, what—what?" she cried, sharply, "what has happened?"

Mr. Hutton explained briefly as he followed her lead, carrying the oldest child while she conveyed the other.

"And you—you are wet!" she exclaimed, stealing a glance from her darlings to notice his condition.

"Never mind me." And he turned to go.

"Oh, don't go yet," said Mrs. Winchester, appealingly. "My husband will be home soon, and I want you to see him. I can't thank you; words are so weak."

"No thanks are necessary," said Hutton, coolly. "And as for your good husband, I've just parted company with him."

With that he strode from the room, and, wrapping himself in his warm robe, drove home.

The next morning Hutton stood at his gate, his hands in his pockets, evidently in a brown study. He was pondering on what move he would make next in his puzzling game of life, now that his home was to be snatched from him. He wore a dogged look, which by no means softened as he observed Mr. Winchester driving up. The latter stopped before the gate, and an observer would have noted that the men had seemed to have changed positions. Hutton nodded coolly, without changing his attitude or expression, while Mr. Winchester breathed quickly and looked nervous.

"Hutton," he said, "I have called to see you about that little affair we were talking of yesterday."

"Ah, yes," observed the young man, jingling a bunch of keys in his moneyless pockets. "I remember you are a man perfectly competent to take care of your own family—"

"Hush! Don't!" begged Winchester. "Here, take this as an evidence of my gratitude. It's a quit-claim on the place you occupy."

"And do you suppose," said Hutton, with a deep-drawn breath, "that I am saving other people's lives and risking my own, as a mater of dollars and cents?"

"No, no! God forbid!" said the farmer. "Listen! I've changed since yesterday. Yesterday, as I saw you save my little ones, I felt a great pain here," and he beat his breast, "but this morning, as I thought of what I might do to make your life easier, and the encouragement I could give you not to be beaten in the great struggle of life, I felt a great joy instead of pain. This is not a matter of compensation; it comes from the heart."

The two clasped hands, and in that moment something new and deep and warm and strange came into the lives of each—the finding and recognition of a heart.—Chicago News.

A Timeless Town.

The old proverb says that time was made for slaves. It is certainly true that it was made for Alsacians, if the following story told by a traveler lately returned from Alsace be true. Says he: "On my return from Belchen I looked upon the beautiful villages of the Lewen valley, and, being a tourist who likes to poke his nose into everything. I turned, by chance, into the church at Kirchberg. On coming out I took out my watch to regulate it by the clock in the church tower. But there was no clock to be seen. Hence I went into the village inn, and there asked the time. But my host could not oblige me. 'I can't tell you exactly, for, you see,' he said, 'we have no use for clocks. In the morning we go by the smoke rising from the chimney at the parsonage up on the hill. The parsonage people are very regular. We dine when dinner is ready. At 4 p. m. the whistle of the train coming from Massmunster tells us that the time has come for another meal, and at night we know that it is time to go to bed when it is dark. On Sunday we go to church when the bell rings. Our parson is a very easy-going man, and he doesn't mind beginning half an hour sooner or later.'"—Harper's Round Table.

Diamonds and Dirt.

She was not an especially handsome woman, but she had well shaped hands, long, slender and very white. Like most women who think they have good hands, she wore no gloves. But she wore rings; I counted no less than five on one hand, and there were, at least, two more on the other. There were two or three great marquise rings, an unusually heavy wedding ring, and altogether somewhat more than a dozen varieties of gems, with diamonds especially conspicuous. Those hands might have been dazzling, but whenever she held them up the fact was disclosed far more conspicuously than the jewelry, that there was a deep, black line of dirt under each of the finger nails! And all this feminine barbarity was exhibited yesterday on a Buffalo trolley car!—Buffalo Express.

Wanted a Milder Word.

"The highest official in this broad land,' said the campaign orator, "is but the servant of the people." "Hold on," said the man whose whiskers expanded over his chest in the shape of a palm leaf fan; "don't make it ez strong as that." "What do you mean?" "Down to our house the servant bosses my wife and my wife bosses the men folks. The servant breaks china when she feels like it and spanks the baby for exercise. She runs the grocery book to suit herself, and we eat what she buys, when she gets ready to give it to us. Call him the despot of the people, or anything you choose, but 'servant.' For goodness sake, draw it just a little milder."—Washington Star.

A Gain With Every Loss.

UNEXPLORED CANADA.

Five Regions Which Are Unknown to Map Makers.

The Canadian government has sensibly determined upon a scientific expedition to Hudson bay early next year to study the resources of those waters and the surrounding country. The powers at Ottawa owe it to the geographers of the United States to aid much more than they have done in the exploration of Canada, the accepted map of which is now so indefinite. Perhaps Philadelphians have accomplished more in the opening up of Canada's great unexplored areas than all the Canadians of this generation. As for the Hudson bay environs, there are many engineering and commercial reasons why these particular regions should be systematically explored. There are four grand areas of unknown land lying around that far northern body of water.

There is, first of all, upon the northwest the area surrounded by Black's river, Great Slave lake, Athabasca lake, Hatchet and Reindeer lakes, Churchill river and the west coast of Hudson bay, a region of 178,000 square miles, much larger than Great Britain and Ireland, and somewhat larger than Sweden. It has not been explored since Hearne's three journeys in 1769-72. His maps are not even roughly approximate, according to his own account. The second area lies between the Severn and Attawapishkat rivers and the coast of Hudson bay. It comprises 22,000 square miles, a larger area than that of Nova Scotia. The third is the area to the south and east of James bay, embracing 35,000 square miles, where the Bell expedition has just finished a superficial survey. This region may be compared in size to Portugal. It is the nearest of these unexplored regions to large centers of population. The fourth area comprises almost the entire interior of the Labrador peninsula, or northeast territory, and contains 289,000 square miles, or more than twice the area of Great Britain and Ireland, with Newfoundland thrown in. Prof. Hind, Mr. A. P. Low and Mr. R. F. Holme have touched upon but never entered the boundaries of this immense unknown tract. And to these four Hudson bay areas might also be added the lower lying area between Trout lake, Lac Seul and the Albany river, which is small in comparison with the others, yet nevertheless equals in size the whole of Scotland.—Philadelphia Record.

REED MET HIS MATCH.

A Kodak Fiend Wins in a Contest for His Photograph.

A good many stories have been told of Thomas B. Reed since his advent into public life. The big Maine man has met and vanquished a good many political foes in his day, but not long ago the ex-speaker ran across an opponent whom he could not down, although he fought harder than ever before to overcome his antagonist. During a recent visit to Boston a Boston Globe artist was sent out to make a snap shot of the big ex-speaker on the street. After a long wait outside the Republican state committee headquarters, McKinley's presidential rival came down the street with ponderous step and elbowed his way through the crowd of local politicians who occupied a large portion of the sidewalk in front of the city hall. There the kodak fiend espied him, and, adjusting his kodak, "clicked" into it a picture of Maine's idol.

"But I must have another," said the artist to himself as he ran ahead of Mr. Reed, swaying down the narrow street. This time Mr. Reed got his eye on the man with the kodak, and was bound he would not let him get a picture of him. As soon as he saw the artist pointing at him he threw up his arms. On one he carried a light overcoat and in the other hand an umbrella. He twisted his big legs, scowled and shouted: "Here, what are you up to?"

"Oh, nothing much," replied the kodak man, as he snapped his instrument and skipped off.

Mr. Reed has never seen that picture, says a writer in Donahoe's, but if he ever does he will have to laugh in spite of himself. He is twisted all out of shape, with his arms, coat and umbrella lifted over his head. The artist prizes it highly and occasionally exhibits it to lovers of the acrobatic art.

HE IS WELL TREATED

And Does Not Propose to Build Another Railroad.

Henry W. Oliver, the great iron man of Pittsburg, is largely interested in mining on the Mesaba range in Minnesota. The Pittsburg Dispatch says that "when shown a telegram from St. Paul stating that he was backing the Merritts in building a rival road, Mr. Oliver said that, so far as he was concerned, there was not a single word of truth in the statement; that the relation between his interests and the Duluth, Mesaba & Northern people were not strained; that he had no disposition, no desire to encourage or assist in the building of another line of railroad, and that he thought that the lines of railroad now in the country should be encouraged by paying them a fair rate of freight, so that they could provide additional facilities for moving the heavy tonnage now pressing on the lines. Mr. Oliver stated that his treatment by the Rockefeller interests had always been fair, and he had no reason to anticipate any change in their policy."

A Commotion.

There was considerable commotion in the carpenter's shop. Voices were being raised angrily.

"You're a screw!"

"You're a bore!"

"Ain't he plane?"

"Think I'll reduce myself to your evel?"

"Well, act on the square, then!"

"Oh, go and read adze!"

At that moment the hammer hit the nail on the head, which so amused the foot-rule that it doubled up.—New York Recorder.

DROPS SILVER FOR GOLD.

Transformation of a Utah Mine to Suit the Market.

The town of Mercur, formerly called Lewiston, which is about four hours' ride by rail from Salt Lake City, is now the center of the coming great gold-mining camp of Utah. It is situated in what is known as the Camp Floyd mining district, and though about two years have elapsed since the revival of the camp, the town now claims 135 families. Formerly it was known as a silver camp, but to-day it is as a gold camp, possessing features peculiarly its own, which distinguish it in a marked degree from all other gold sections known, in that gold contained in its ores seems to be absolutely free from all association with silver and practically 1000-fine.

The extent of the area covered by the Mercur belt is as yet unknown, but positive developments of great value have been made upon it at a distance of from five and a half to six miles from one another. The ore bodies appear to lie upon the planes of contact of the limestone, along which planes the mineralized water undoubtedly found access to the limestone, and in which the ores are found. They carry a very high percentage of silica, which by process of replacement has taken the place of lime in the beds, depositing at the same time with it the other mineral constituents, such as gold, mercury, arsenic, iron and gypsum. On the average, the gold contents of the ore are not high, the value running from a trace to $1 or $2 per ton upon the surface, to $7 or $12 at a more or less increased depth. It is, however, the fact of their being found in such large quantities, combined with light mining and milling cost, and their ready susceptibility to the action of a weak solution of cyanide of potassium, that renders the future of this camp so promising. There are at present but three companies whose mines are equipped with mills in operation.

The chief obstacle to the entire section is the comparative scarcity of water, but this difficulty will soon be obviated by the piping of water from Ophir Creek, a distance of five or six miles, into the camp, for both domestic and milling purposes. The line will have a theoretical capacity sufficient for the treatment of 3,500 tons of ore per day. This work is now in process of construction, and demonstrates the confidence that capital in this section has in the permanency and future greatness of the camp.—Detroit Free Press.

Why He Hates Woman.

A writer in the Westminster Gazette explains the wherefore of his aversion to the feminine sex in the following reasons. I hate woman—

Because she stabs me in the eye with her parasol, offers no apology and looks as if I did it.

Because she pushes for a place in the trains and omnibuses, and, being in, never makes any room for any other people.

Because she climbs to the tops of omnibuses, to descend from which demands grace and decency.

Because she thinks the only way to make an omnibus stop is to prod the driver, if she cannot reach the conductor.

Because she mislays her bag, loses her handkerchief and carries her purse in her hand.

Because she recites, plays violins and rides bicycles.

Because she walks three in a row upon the pavement and expects every one else to make way for her.

Because she is "fluent, but not lucid," and more concerned about the number of her facts than the truth of them.

Because, in nine cases out of ten, she can neither sew, nor read aloud, nor make tea.

Because she is always writing letters and wanting me and others to answer them.

Because she is the slave of fashion; and that not only in clothes, but in art, music, manners, religion, flowers, jewelry, language and furniture.

Because she does not value anything simply because it is "good" (following a fashion set in the days before woman existed), but because it is "worn," or "done," or even "talked about."

Women as Magnets.

"You don't believe these stories about women being human magnets, do you?" Dora asked.

"Some of them are mighty attractive," David said, looking at her somewhat keenly.

Dora blushed.

"I don't mean that," she said; "I mean their doing such great things—lifting half a dozen men and all those tricks. Do you believe it?"

"Well, I don't know," David reflectively answered. "I saw a woman today—she wasn't more than five feet high, and slight at that—I saw her just lift a finger—it was right in the street, crowds of people around her—she raised her finger and—and—"

"Well, for pity sakes, what?" exclaimed Dora, impatiently. "Don't be so long about it."

"I don't go so far as to say she had electrical powers," David pursued, calmly; "I won't undertake to explain what it was, but this much I can vouch for, for I saw it with my own eyes—the moment she raised that little finger—it had a dainty pink nail on it—a heavily loaded street car that was passing came to an instant stop."

But Dora, with heightened color, declared that if ever another woman lived who was married to so mean a man all she had got to say was that she pitied her.—New York Recorder.

Temporary Telephones.

A novel idea in telephone practice has been put into execution by a New England company. A letter has been sent to all the physicians in New Haven stating that in many cases of sudden attacks of illness a telephone from the house of a patient would be of the greatest value. To meet this need the company announced that, on the request of a person in the city limits, indorsed by the physician attendant, a telephone would be placed in the house for a period of thirty days for the sum of $5, and if the family wishes then to continue the service, the same rate would be made for each succeeding month. The plan promises to be a success.—Boston Transcript.

Gained His Freedom.

THE FETTERS OF PAIN WERE BROKEN.

A Marvelous Change—How a Future of Gloom Was Averted—The Present Full of Joy and Hope.

From the Herald, Helena, Mont.

As rugged and hardy as one of the pines which grow in the Rocky Mountain region is G. E. Ticknor, of Helena, Montana. For twenty-four years he has resided in the mountain country, but his vigor is not due altogether to the bracing air of Montana. Last fall Mr. Ticknor was what might be termed a physical wreck. For eight weeks he lay on his bed suffering from a severe attack of sciatic rheumatism in one of his hips. Physicians and medicines gave him no relief and the future looked gloomy. Added to his troubles was the anxiety concerning the care of a large family. By chance one day Mr. Ticknor saw an account of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. He said to a Herald reporter that he was not in favor of proprietary remedies, but in this instance something in the article caught his attention and he determined to give the pills a trial. In the interview with the Herald representative the other day Mr. Ticknor spoke in the most emphatic terms of the marvelous change in his condition. "Before a week had gone by," he said, "I was able to get out of bed and move about. I had hardly used one box of the pills. By the time I had taken three boxes I felt twenty years younger. In fact I was a new man and have been perfectly well ever since. I can't say too much for Pink Pills and I never miss an opportunity to praise them."

When the Herald representative saw Mr. Ticknor he was making some repairs on the school building on Boulder Avenue. He swung his carpenter's hammer with all the vigor of a lusty young man and looked as hale and hearty as any man of his years to be found in the entire Rocky Mountain country. He is fifty-nine years old and is able to do a day's work at his trade of carpenter. Pink Pills can always be found in his house. Mr. Ticknor lives at 1419 Boulder Avenue, near the American Biscuit Manufacturing Company's plant, where he will be glad to see anyone who wishes to verify this account of his experience with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. Pink Pills are sold in boxes at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

TURKEY IN A COOP.

THE POWERS ARE EVIDENTLY PREPARING FOR TROUBLE.

It Is Reported That the Powers Will Make a Naval Display in Turkish Waters in the Hope of Bringing the Sultan to Time.

Constantinople, Nov. 13.—As a result of the exchange of numerous telegrams between the representatives of the powers and their respective governments, lasting nearly all day Saturday an important meeting of the ambassadors was held here to-day and the situation was thoroughly discussed. Finally it was decided to send fresh representations to the Turkish minister of foreign affairs, Tewfik Pasha, renewing in much stronger language the demands addressed by the ambassadors to Tewfik Pasha's predecessor, Said Pasha, on Nov. 5, and insisting upon being informed without further delay as to what measures the porte contemplates taking in order to restore order in Armenia and reminding the Turkish government that it has already been notified of the intention of the powers acting in concert to take their own steps in the matter, should it develop the action of the porte is inadequate to deal with the state of anarchy prevailing in Anatolia.

It is known that the sultan still refuses to believe that the powers are in accord as to the action to be taken in case of the porte's failure to restore order in the Turkish empire. No amount of persuasion seems strong enough to bring Abdul Hamid to reason, and the opinion is freely expressed that nothing short of will awaken the Turks to a realization of the actual condition of affairs. The speech which the marquis of Salisbury made in London will, it is believed, have a marked effect upon the porte, especially if the British premier refers strongly and pointedly to the present crisis. Mild language, however, it is said here, will only make the sultan hold out all the longer.

The rioting and bloodshed at Erzeroum is said to have been much more serious than any reports previously made public have pictured it, and it is asserted that even the presence of Shakir Pasha, who has troops, failed to stop the massacre. The unresisting Armenian men, women and children were bludgeoned to death by hundreds on the streets. A traveler who arrived here recently from Trebizond says that he met between Erzeroum and Baiburt 300 women, who fell on their knees by the roadside, imploring protection, saying that their husbands were murdered and that they were starving and homeless. The rising of the Druses is extending on all sides, and several villages of the district of Hauran have been destroyed by fire.

If Shakir Pasha, the high commissioner appointed by the Turkish government to carry out the scheme of reform agreed upon for Armenia, is unable, supported by Turkish troops, to stop the wholesale massacre of Armenians in the streets of an important city like Erzeroum, it is difficult to see how the wild Khurdish tribes in the outlying districts can be prevented from continuing the work of extermination of the Armenians, which has been going on for some time past, apparently with the approval of the sultan.

(Copyright, by Associated Press, 1895.)

Constantinople, Nov. 14. — It was stated to-day in European circles here that as a result of an additional exchange of views between the powers, through their representatives here and at the different capitals, it is believed that a joint course of action involving a display of naval and possibly military force has already been decided upon with a view of restoring order in Armenia, recent events having clearly demonstrated that the sultan has no intention of really carrying out the scheme for reform agreed upon some time ago, after so much delay and annoyance. Nothing definite, however, appears to be known regarding the course of action decided upon; but it is now believed that the sultan will not be allowed to trifle with the ambassadors for many days longer, and news of an important nature is expected at any moment.

The rumors so persistently circulated for many weeks past as to the probability that the sultan would be deposed, are repeated on all sides today, and it would seem that they may have been revived by some definite statement on the subject, having been overheard by some of the embassies.

Snubbed by the Sultan.

Each day shows the situation of affairs here to be growing more threatening. The reply of the porte to the communications sent to it after the meeting of the ambassadors yesterday, has been awaited with interest, as in the note the representative of the powers used much stronger language than heretofore, and positively insisted upon being immediately informed as to what steps the Turkish government intended to take for the restoration of order in the disturbed provinces of Asia Minor. The porte to-day, replying to the identical notes of the ambassadors of Germany, Austria and Italy, simply said that information regarding the scheme for reform in Armenia would be forwarded to the representatives of the powers "without delay."

In other words these three ambassadors at least have obtained no satisfaction at all. It is not yet known if the notes of the ambassadors of Great Britain, Russia and France have been replied to, but it is presumed that they were also assured that their requests for information regarding the proposed reforms would be complied with without delay.

Surprise is expressed even by the diplomats of this city, who expect almost anything from the porte, at the action of the sultan in sanctioning the official note issued yesterday, as cabled exclusively by the Associated Press, expressing Abdul Hamed's thanks for the "energetic measures taken by the imperial authorities," in "suppressing the disturbances in Asia Minor," asserting that "order has now been restored in all the districts recently the scene of riots and conflicts," and adding that "precautions have been taken to insure the maintenance of order." This really looks and as second in importance only to the snub administered by the sultan to Great Britain in decorating Bahri Pasha and giving him the command of troops going to Zeitoun after he had been removed from a governorship at the instance of the British ambassador, Sir Philip Currie, for his ill treatment of Armenians.

As to order being restored in the disturbed districts, it need only be said that mobilization of about 150,000 troops to be sent to these districts is progressing as actively as the Turkish government can push an undertaking, hampered as it is by a lack of funds and the incompetence of its officials.

Then, again, advices received here to-day announce fresh disturbances at Marash, Bitlis and Sivas, with their attendant massacres.

It is also announced that a battalion of Turkish troops, which was in garrison at Zeitoum, and which recently distinguished itself by surrounding and shooting down a number of Armenian insurgents, was later besieged in its barracks by the Armenians, to whom the soldiers eventually capitulated, with arms and ammunition, bag and baggage. It is added that the Armenians now occupy the quarters at Zeitoun previously occupied by the Turkish soldiers.

The Armenians, it is further stated, have also garrisoned all the important positions in and about Zeitum, and are gathering ammunition and provisions, throwing up other fortifications and in every way preparing to hold the place. Zeitoun is on the route from Arabgher to Aleppo, and is an important iron mining center.

Considerable anxiety is felt in American circles here on account of the absence of news from the districts where the American missionaries are stationed, and the United States ambassador, Mr. Terrell, has telegraphed to Commissioner Darnham at Harput, asking him if the American missions are safe.

According to advices to-day from Hadjin, several villages in that vicinity have been attacked by rioters, who massacred the inhabitants and plundered their property. It is feared that the disturbances will spread to Hadjin.

(Copyright, 1895, by Associated Press.)

Constantinople, Nov 15.—The Turkish minister for foreign affairs, Tewfik Pasha, replied to-day to the notes of the diplomatic representatives of Great Britain, Russia and France, assuring them, as he had previously assured the ambassadors of Germany, Austria and Italy, that the Turkish government's statement as to what measures it intends to take for the suppression of disorders in Asia Minor will be presented "without delay."

The statement published in the United States that there has been trouble at Angora and Palu, and that 1,000 Armenians there have been massacred, is also a clumsy invention. No news of a disturbance of any kind has reached here from Angora or Palu.

In the meanwhile fresh disturbances are reported from Malatiah, where a number of persons have been killed, including four priests of the Society of Jesus, who are under French protection. The French ambassador, M. Cambon, has been appealed to, and is preparing a very strong representation on the subject for the porte. A squadron of has sailed from the Piraeus for Turkish waters, and it is stated that an Italian fleet will rendezvous with the British fleet within a few days. There has been most serious trouble at Caesare, not far from Jerusalem; but no details of the rioting there have yet reached this city.

A great panic prevails at at Moosh, owing to the Kurdish movement. All those who can do so are fleeing from the city and neighborhood. Many people are reported to have been robbed and murdered while fleeing. Troops are, it is claimed, being hurried to the spot.

Replying to the inquiry of the United States ambassador, Mr. Terrell, as to the safety of the American missionaries, Commissioner Darnham has telegraphed from Harput, saying that the missionaries are alive, but in extreme danger. Mr. Terrell has informed Tewfik Pasha that the government will be held responsible for the safety of the missionaries. The Turkish minister of foreign affairs has assured Mr. Terrell that everything possible will be done for their protection. As Mr. Terrell has great influence with the palace authorities, it may be presumed that Tewfik Pasha will keep his word.

Fleets Gather.

Constantinople, Nov. 16.—The Italian fleet is on its way to Salonica bay to join the British fleet of about twenty warships already there. The French and Russian fleet is expected there shortly. The representatives of the powers, as a result of communications exchanged with their governments, have had another informal meeting at the French embassy. When the four squadrons have united and the British ambassador returns some decided step upon the part of the powers may be anticipated.

News received here from the district of Van to-day records fresh massacres of Armenian Christians there. The Kurds of Van are said to be attacking and pillaging the Armenian villages, and the Turkish officials are reported to be powerless to preserve order.

Further troubles are also reported at Kharput, Malitich and Arabkir, and at Marash the bloodshed and outrages are said to have been even more terrible and prolonged than at Erzeroum.

During the rioting at Marash, Hadjin and Orfah, the American missionaries, thanks to the strong representations made on the subject to the porte by the United States ambassador, Alexander W. Terrell, were protected by the Turkish gendarmes. This it is known, was by direct order of the porte telegraphed to the Turkish officials at the places mentioned.

Owing to additional disquieting news just received here from Sivas, Mr. Terrell has renewed his demand that the porte protect the missionaries, and he is holding the Turkish government responsible for their lives.

There are rumors in Russian circles here of great activity being displayed in connection with the Black sea fleet of Russia, and for some time past important movements of troops are known to have been taking place on the frontiers of Russia, nearest to the disturbed districts of Asiatic Turkey.

Persecuted Turks.

Constantinople, Nov. 16.—Official dispatches published here to-day from the disturbed districts say that the Armenians in every case have been the aggressors and attacked the Mussulmans, who were obliged to defend themselves against the ferocity of the Armenians. At Arabkir, Oct. 26 and 27, the official reports add, the Armenians set fire to a mosque, school and bazaar with bombs and massacred a number of Mohammedans. The authorities, it is claimed, afterwards discovered forty bombs, which the Armenians intended to explode in the local barracks and government offices.

On Nov. 2, still according to the official announcements, the Armenians of Erzinghian attacked the government offices, barracks and other buildings, but were dispersed by the military. Over 5,000 revolutionists are said to be assembled at Tchoukmerzen and Adana, prepared to fight the Turkish troops.

Ordered to Kill.

Constantinople, Nov. 17. — A letter from Erzeroum fully confirms the reports previously published concerning the massacre there. The writer says that it is impossible yet to ascertain the number killed. Some persons assert that it will reach fully 2,000. Perhaps a thousand is not far short of the total. Continuing, the writer says: "We have not dared to go to the quarters of the city where the Turks are too numerous. It might be said of the tithes of Christians who have been victims thus far, and I have not the opportunity of investigating more than a tenth of the cases, I have yet to hear of a single dead Turk in this struggle. This, I think, disproves the charges of the aggressions brought up against the Armenians. The bare bold fact is that it was purely a massacre of the innocent inhabitants by the enraged Turks, and but for the presence of foreign consuls things would have been worse. With the coming of winter the misery in store for the remaining Armenians will be terrible."

The correspondent quoted, who is staying at the American mission, says that he has heard testimony in various quarters that the government ordered the massacres, which was to be executed according to previous orders.

All the looting, it was claimed, was done by regular soldiers at the command of officers. Many women hung around the soldiers for the purpose of carrying off the plunder.

Protects Turkey.

London, Nov. 19.—Sir Philip Currie, British ambassador to Turkey, who has been in England during the past month in consultation with Lord Salisbury in reference to the troubles between the Turks and Armenians, will start in the morning for Constantinople, via Vienna. His journey back to Turkey will be made in as short a time as possible, and he will resume his post at Constantinople without loss of time.

Lord Salisbury, accompanied by his wife, went to visit the queen at Windsor castle last night. It is evident that important decisions have been arrived at regarding Eastern affairs since to-morrow morning's Post will publish an article evidently inspired by the foreign office. The article is understood to indicate that the prime minister has decided that the utmost effort must be made to maintain the integrity of the Turkish empire, and therefore efforts must, in the first place, be directed to restoring order in the disturbed district. Continuing the article says:

"For the moment all thought of coercing the sultan should be laid aside. He has already given evidence of a desire to introduce reforms. It cannot be doubted that he will defer to the wishes of the powers as soon as circumstances permit him to do so. It is difficult to apportion the blame justly between the Turks and the Christians. The ambassadors of the foreign powers in general, and Sir Philip Currie in particular, have acquired a position enabling them to give important support to the Turkish government at this critical time. Sir Philip Currie's instructions are such as to justify him in delaying the execution of reforms until the authority by which they are to be carried out has recovered from temporary weakness. At the present moment any naval demonstration in Turkish waters, or undue pressure on the Turkish government, can only help precipitate a crisis from which Turkey's friends can hope to gain nothing, and her enemies everything."

Is the Sultan Insane?

Hon. Francis Seymour Stevenson, M. P., president of the Anglo-Armenian association, in an interview, says: "The sultan has lately developed symptoms of a monomania hardly distinguishable from insanity, and it is not unlikely that he will meet with the same fate that overtook his brother, Murad, the former sultan, and thus simplify the task of Europe."

Lamont Took His Trunk From the Express Office.

St. Paul, Nov. 19.—If the authorities be right in their theory there is a red-handed murderer in jail at the head of the lakes who is possessed of a mania for blood, and it is within the range of possibilities that he may become a particular object of interest to Minnesotans, though he is now confined in Douglas county, Wisconsin. His name is Henry Lamont, and he is specifically charged with the murder of one T. McCarthy, first name unknown, about Oct. 1. Yesterday there was evidence obtained in St. Paul connecting Lamont with the disappearance of Norman McMillan, who was last seen in the company of Lamont about a month ago. In Two Harbors Lamont met McMillan, a young Scotchman who had been working in that vicinity, and who had saved some money. They left Two Harbors together and made their way to St. Paul, McMillan shipping his trunk by express, as it contained some valuables in the form of certificates of deposit—at least so McMillan had told some friends. When the train left Two Harbors McMillan had $52 in cash. It is thought that McMillan never reached St. Paul. Oct. 12 a young man went to the Minnesota hotel and gave the name of Norman McMillan. That same day he went to the United States Express company's office and took out McMillan's trunk, the receipt being accepted by a clerk, J. T. Moyer. Yesterday Moyer identified a photograph of Lamont as the picture of the man who signed the receipt in McMillan's name. The receipt is obviously written in Lamont's hand. McMillan's relatives and friends have taken the matter up and are convinced that Lamont killed him.

AN AWFUL DEATH.

CAR LOAD OF PEOPLE DROWNED LIKE RATS IN A TRAP.

An Electric Car Filled With People Runs Into an Open Draw on a Bridge at Cleveland, Ohio, and Falls a Hundred Feet Into the River.

Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 19.—A heavy electric motor car containing many passengers went through the draw of the central viaduct and dropped 101 feet to the river below.

It is a horror the like of which has never before occurred here. The central viaduct is a huge stilt bridge 3,000 feet long, made of iron. It connects the heights and the prosperous residence section on the south side with the business center of the city. Directly over the bridge is a draw bridge of the pivot swinging pattern, and this is 101 feet above the surface of the water. The South side street railway passes over the bridge, and on either side of the draw there is a safety switch, which, unless the conductor alights and holds up a handle, will send a car into the gutter instead of allowing it to go on the draw.

First reports from the scene of the disaster seemed to place the blame on the conductor. They were that the ill-fated motor car, containing between twenty and thirty people, approached the draw just as a vessel was nearing it, and the bridge attendants had closed the big iron gates and were preparing to swing the draw. As is the rule, the car stopped and the conductor went forward to release the switch in case the way was clear. He must have been blinded by the electric lights, for an eye-witness declares that although the gates were closed and the draw was already in motion, the conductor raised the switch handle. The motorman applied the current and the car shot forward and struck the gates with a crash. There was only a moment's pause and then the heavy car ground its way through the wreckage and plunged over the brink into the black abyss, amid the of the passengers, who, at the first intimation of danger rushed for the rear door. The car struck the water with a great splash and then there was silence. Soon men began to rush shouting about, and police patrol wagons and ambulances were soon flying to the spot in response to telephone calls. In an incredibly short space of time the work of rescue begun.

STRETCHED A ROPE.

Negro in Maryland is Lynched by a Mob.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 19.—James Goings assaulted Miss Lillie Jones at the Home of Hamilton Geisbert, near this city last night, and was taken from the jail by a mob of 300 men this morning and hanged on the Jefferson turnpike, one mile from the city.

A report reached the city about midnight that the woman had died from the cuts and beating inflicted by the negro, and this infuriated the men who had been gathering in the streets and discussing the outrage. A mob was quickly gotten together and unmasked but armed with revolvers, the men marched to the jail. They had previously broken into a machine shop in the neighborhood of the jail and procured sledges, crowbars and files. They made at once for the door on the west wing of the jail and began to batter upon it. Fully twenty shots were fired from the windows above by Sheriff A. H. Zimmerman and his deputies, but the mob paid no attention to them and went on with their work. The jail bell was rung to summon assistance, but none came.

In twenty minutes the large door panels gave way under the heavy blows and the mob burst into the corridor. They quickly overcame the slight resistance the officers on the inside were able to offer and found the cell in which Goings, cowering and crying, was confined. The lock was opened, and the trembling wretch seized and dragged out in his night clothes and stocking feet. In the meantime the friends of the lynchers on the outside had lowered an electric lamp near the jail and cut the rope from it, extinguishing the light.

Prayers Offered.

Goings was led out amid the howls of the crowd, the rope placed around him and he was hurried down the road to his place of doom. He protested his innocence as they dragged him along, and begged them not to kill him. He was promptly recognized by a number of men who knew him, and the mob did not hesitate in its work. Arrived at the tree the negro was asked to confess, but this he would not do. Two officers of the Salvation Army asked to be allowed to pray with the man and their request was granted. The Lord's prayer was then repeated and the negro and most of the crowd joined in. Goings' feet and hands were then tied and the rope was drawn around his neck. A man seized the other end of it and threw the cord over a limb.

"Let him go," was shouted, and as quick as a flash he was jerked from his feet and hung dangling in the air six feet from the ground. One shot was fired into his body and in a few minutes he was dead.

The mob during the process of the lynching observed order; none were allowed to fire at him except the one. A member of the mob made a brief speech, in which he said that they were there with the unfortunate wretch, not in a spirit of malice, but to make an example of him, and teach his race that they must let the women of Frederick county alone.

THE NEW CARDINAL.

Mgr. Satolli Will Soon Be Presented With a Red Hat.

Washington, Nov. 19. — Archbishop Francis Satolli, who, it is announced, will soon be created a cardinal by the pope, has, since 1893, served as apostolic delegate to the United States, with complete jurisdiction. He was born at Marsciano, in the diocese of Perugia, in 1837. In 1862 he was ordained a priest and in 1880 was made professor in the Urban College of Propaganda. In 1885 the pope conferred on him the dignity of canon of St. John Lateran (the mother church of the world.) In June, 1888, he was appointed archbishop of Lepanto. In the fall of 1889 he came to America as representative of the pope in the inauguration of the Catholic University at Washington, D. C., and again in 1892 represented the pope at the Columbian exposition.

Her husband, now 107 years old, still survives, though in a very feeble condition. They were beyond a doubt the oldest living couple in the state, if not in the United States, and had been married nearly four score of years. They were of Canadian-French origin and were born near Montreal, but have lived in this vicinity for half a century. A family of twelve children was the fruits of their marriage, five still living, whose ages range from 54 to 70 years.

The Red Lake Indians are going to send a kicking committee to Washington this winter to get the reservation opened. They are wise, if the reservation is not opened before another administration we will probably have another batch of estimators and the sale of the land and pine wont pay the bill. Between forest fires, estimators and surveyors if the reservation is not speedily opened the poor indian will get much the worst of the transaction.

The special grand jury called by Judge Ives will not bother itself with chasing up blind pigs which are supposed to inhabit Marshall county. It is called for no other purpose than to investigate complaints made that grain buyers in that county are not living up to the provisions of their license, and are guilty of misdemeanors under the law of 1895 regulating duties of grain buyers. The grain buyers are charged with keeping down grades of wheat, giving the wrong grade where the opportunity is afforded docking to much for dirt, and mixing different grades of wheat.

The order has been issued for the venire, but the venire will not be placed in the sheriffs hands until the county board meets in December. Judge Ives leaves the matter with them, and if they are opposed to the expense of a special grand jury the order will be vacated. The time set for the meeting of the jury is January 6th instead of December 6th.—Crookston Tribune.

The announcement published in another column to-day, to the effect that the Chippewa Indians were uniting in a protest at the delay in opening the Red Lake reservation and asking congress to amend the law of 1879, should be good news to the people of the northwest. The Times has repeatedly protested against the manner in which the indians were being robbed in order to furnish soft snaps for political pap suckers and has urged upon the people of this section to take some action looking to an early opening of the reservation. We now repeat with emphasis what we have said before. This is the time to act. The Indians have become aroused to the wrongs inflicted upon them by the government and have decided to insist upon their rights. Let the people of this section join with them and insist upon such action by the government as will open this reservation and place the pine upon the market. Now is the time to strike, and united and intelligent action will accomplish the result

Ah, you squeal now do you, Mr Merchant? Well we are sorry you are hurt, but we have warned you that your turn was coming. Thirty-nine cent wheat makes dull business. While it lasts you may expect seven Sundays every week.

Two years ago nearly every business man in Aberdeen prayed congress to repeal the silver purchase clause of the Sherman law. These wise men wanted honest money. No 50 cents dollars for them. Now they would be glad to see an occasional 50 cent dollar, but in a few months their bankers will tell them it is the greenback that is knocking things and they will pray congress to retire the greenbacks and then wheat will go down to 25 cents.

Well, go it gentlemen. You have voices and your squeal is musical. But we fear you haven't got your belly full yet. Perhaps 25 cent wheat will not satisfy you. Perhaps you can complacently gaze upon your former customers who may starve or freeze this winter after raising a good crop. It may be determined to go on as you have until it is too late to settle this economic difficulties peacefully for we now warn you that men will not see their loved ones suffer much longer as they have suffered. It is encouraging to see you shake your fist and hear you holler when this 39 cent wheat destroys your trade, but if you mean to keep right on voting the old party ticket, gold basis, cheap wheat Taylor steal, and all you would look better to keep still for that is just what you are voting for.—Dakota Ruralist.

Jumping from the chair she sat in.

Say that health and wealth have missed me,

The Truth About Opals.

"The superstition which causes people to regard opals with awe as the cause of ill luck and even death," said a jeweler yesterday, "is due to a peculiar observation made many years ago. Opals were in considerable use in Venice during the plague, and it was noticed there in the hospitals that before death the stone would sometimes brighten upon the victim's finger. It never seemed to occur to the people that the illness could produce a glow of color. They took it for granted that the stone occasioned the illness. As a matter of fact, opals are affected by heat, even by that of the hand, and the fever, being at its height just before death, caused the color to shine with unwonted clearness. This confirmed the superstition, and to this day there are sane and ablebodied people who believe that a chip of stone in the house can cause calamities.

"Probably another reason for the distrust excited in opals is the fact that they change and lose their color. That is due to the softness and porousness of the material and its capacity both for absorbing water and parting with what it has, one of which tends to make it dull and the other chalky and opaque. They have been known to be carefully cut and laid away, and, upon opening the paper had crumbled into dust within a few weeks. A species of opal, known as the hydrophane, found in small quantities lately in Colorado, has wonderful powers of absorption. In its usual state it is of yellowish, waxy tint, but when water is dropped upon it the tint passes slowly away, and from being translucent it becomes transparent. On exposure to the air the water evaporates in an hour, leaving the stone as it was before."—Washington Post.

Stoled Applause.

A rector living in Ireland had an unpleasantness with the peasantry in regard to the payment of tithes, and it happened thereafter that when he or any of his family appeared abroad they were received with cries of "Mad dog! Mad dog!" and other shouts equally emphatic and unpleasant. The dean and his family were also saluted in like manner because they insisted upon visiting the proscribed citizen, and this gave rise one day to a curious incident.

Anstey, a poet popular in Dublin and well known there as the translator of Goethe's "Faust," drove from Limerick to Dublin in the car of the dean to make the latter a short visit. The usual shouting followed, but being slightly deaf the poet heard only the cries and not the words of threatening and abuse. At dinner he said, to his host, with a beaming countenance:

"Mr. Dean, I never knew I was so well known down here. Fame surely travels farther than we think. I assure you that nearly the whole way from Limerick I was loudly cheered by the people."—Youth's Companion.

Hall Caine.

Hall Caine, author of "The Manxman," in answer to a question about his life, said: "I was brought up as an architect in the country, and at the same time used to lecture upon literary topics: Shakespeare was one of my favorite subjects. My lectures attracted the attention of Dante Rossetti, who lived in London in a big, desolate barn of a house in Chelsea. There he used to paint and write a little and walk in the desolate garden attached to the house. He asked me to go there and live with him. I went to the mountains of Cumberland for my health and invited him to join me there. He said he would if I would come for him, and from that time we never parted until he died in my arms in 1880." Mr. Caine was born in 1853.

Idleness.

It is an undoubted truth that the less one has to do the less one finds time to do it in. One yawns, one procrastinates, one can do it when one will, and therefore one seldom does it at all, whereas those who have a great deal of business must buckle to it, and then they always find time enough to do it in.—New York Ledger.

If you put two persons in the same bedroom, one of whom has the toothache and the other is in love, you will find that the person who has the toothache will go to sleep first. Isn't it curious?

In many countries there is a superstition that when ants are unusually active, running to and fro about their nests, foul weather is sure to occur in a very short time.

The value of foreign timber imported into England annually is not less than $55,000,000, not to speak of tons of paper manufactured from wood pulp.

ARTEMUS WARD'S YOUTH.

The Part He Took In Discussions at the Norway Lyceum.

Some yarns come down from Oxford county concerning the gentle and whimsical showman, Artemus Ward, whose life was an exemplification of his pet motto: "P. S.—U skratch mi back & ile scratch ures." Dr. O. N. Bradbury of Norway, in hunting among his papers, recently discovered the manuscript of an article that was contributed to The Carthaginian Rill, a Norway Lyceum paper, by Charles Farrar Browne (Artemus Ward). He was at that time a student at the Norway Liberal institute, eking out his scanty means by working in The Advertiser office.

The sketch in Dr. Bradbury's possession is a mock advertisement, and it is undoubtedly Artemus Ward's first humorous contribution to any publication. The young student had two small rooms back of the large room used by The Advertiser. These rooms were poorly finished and poorly furnished, being quite guiltless of paint and without carpets. The windows were covered with old newspapers for curtains, and upright boards matched together took the place of lathing and plastering. A small secondhand cook stove, a rude affair of an uncertain age, was used for warming purposes and also for cooking in a modest way, a part of the time at least.

He saved expenses, as many other country boys did at that time, by boarding himself. One leg of the stove had been broken, but was carefully supplemented by pieces of brick. This arrangement of surroundings appeared to satisfy the young student quite well. It made little difference to him, as his old schoolmates will remember, whether the legs of his trousers were outside of his boots or in them. Tipped well back in his chair with his boots on the table was the favorite attitude, and he always appeared oblivious to his surroundings.

He had an easy, happy-go-lucky way and a drawl in speaking that was inimitable. If he spoke on questions in lyceums, he was quite sure to take a humorous view of the subject and was original in his method of conducting the argument. Young Browne had participated in these debates only a short time when his humorous methods of discussing the questions and the unexpected fanciful turns he often gave the debates were so appreciated by the citizens of Norway that large audiences assembled when Charlie Browne was announced as one of the debaters.

On the evenings when these debates were held he would lounge into the hall quite early, and after greeting his more intimate friends take one of the three wooden bottomed chairs, and, placing it upon the raised platform which extended along the north end of the hall, sit down. In a short time he would tip his chair so as to balance it upon the hind legs, with his shoulders against the partition, and with his left foot on the front round of the chair, his right leg crossed over his left knee and his arms folded upon his breast, sit almost motionless during the evening except when called upon to participate in the debate.

As no other student except the president sat on this platform this peculiarity of Charlie Browne was quite noticeable. The more mischievous of the students often tried schemes with strings and wires to tip over his chair, but they never caught him napping. When his turn came to speak, he would lounge out to the middle of the platform, where he would face his audience and in his peculiar, easy, careless manner begin his argument. The other students stood in the aisles among their audiences when speaking, so that Charlie Browne's more conspicuous position on the raised platform was another noticeable oddity.—Lewiston Journal.

A Valuable Sunday School Relic.

Mrs. John J. Atkins of Philadelphia is the proud owner of the pen which Robert Raikes, the English founder of the Sunday school system, used in enrolling his first class of Sabbath school workers. The names inscribed by Raikes with this famous pen were 39 in number—men, women and children of Gloucester, England. The pen is made of a goosequill and is said to have been a Christmas present to the founder of the Sunday school. It is a cumbersome writing implement, about nine inches long, wrapped in yellow silk and covered with beads and tassels from one end to the other. Mr. Raikes gave it to Mrs. Atkins' great-great-grandmother, and it came to its present owner by inheritance.—St. Louis Republic.

A Cure For "Out of Sorts."

This is what the mother of the bishop of Huntington did to cure herself of being "out of sorts," when she was 58 years old, as shown by an extract from her diary. "Took physic and consulted the family physician, all to no purpose; suspected the disorder to be nervous; ducked about, put on great resolution and made mince pies, and found myself no worse than before."

HOW NOT TO PROSPER.

An Object Lesson From Practical Business Life.

The peculiarities of human nature have a forcible illustration in the business development of St. Louis county, Minnesota. Three or four years ago several brothers named Merritt, who had followed the business of timber exploring for many years, discovered, through their employes, valuable iron deposits in the swamps and dense woods of Northern Minnesota. They were without means, but succeeded in enlisting sufficient Minnesota capital to partially construct a railroad and to begin mining developments at one or two points. Every one wished them well, and no legislative or other obstacle was placed in their path.

Business circumstances changed, and the railroad and some of the mining companies organized under the Merritt auspices were upon the point of bankruptcy in the panic of 1893. Knives were drawn and bloodshed threatened by their unpaid miners. The employes of the railroad were on the point of riot. Contractors were attacked and knocked down. Attachments and liens were numerously filed, while the paper of the railroad and of its promoters was going to protest on every hand and their properties covered with judgments. In these depressing circumstances they turned toward outside capital for relief, and although, according to their own statements, they visited all the principal cities of the country, no single capitalist was willing to turn to their relief except Rockefeller of New York. Mr. Rockefeller loaned them money for their personal relief and advanced great sums for their personal enterprises, saving them from impending ruin and making their bankrupt stocks valuable. Finally he bought them out. It appears that Rockefeller soon had some $3,000,000 invested in Minnesota, and has since been adding to these investments in the development of these costly properties.

The riotous employes of the railroad and mines, threatened with starvation, were paid in full. The contractors were honorably settled with. The mammoth dock under construction at Duluth was completed. Branch railroad lines were extended. New mining properties were opened. The city of Duluth was saved from utter wreck, and employment given to thousands of men at an expense of hundreds of thousands of dollars. While banks were failing everywhere else, not a bank in Duluth failed. On the contrary, their clearances showed positive increase. All this at a time when the industries of the country were paralyzed and men most needed work.

Under these circumstances, it would seem natural that Rockefeller should be treated with ordinary fairness. But here is where the perversity of human nature comes in. Rockefeller is rich. Because he is rich he is marked as fair game. Last winter a powerful lobby was organized and the legislature implored to drive him from the state and practically confiscate his property. The newspapers of the state have been flooded with hostile articles, the aim of which has been to create adverse public sentiment so that he should not have fair play. Every possible scheme which cunning could devise has been worked to prevent justice being done. Apart from all other considerations, this is bad policy. Hostility of this kind against capital seeking investment in our state will serve only as a warning to other capitalists and an invitation to make their investments elsewhere. It tends to drive the capital which employs labor out of the state and to keep it out. It is a sure way not to prosper.—St. Cloud Journal-Press.

HE IS ALIVE.

The Wonderful Experience of a Man Who Had Reached the Brink of Destruction—Help Came Late but Sure—Words Cannot Describe the Joy He Felt at This Wonderful Restoration.

No one who has never experienced the miserable life of a dyspeptic can realize the joy that filled the heart of Mr. Andrew Talesen, who resides at 856 Marican street, St. Paul. His was the experience of a man terribly emaciated by continual indigestion and an inability to obtain nourishment from his food, who suffered the most agonizing pains and lived a life deprived of every joy. When hope, too, had about departed, health, happiness and life were returned to him by the use of the Kickapoo Indian Medicines. In this connection Mr. Talesen says,—"I want to thank you for the great benefit I have derived from Kickapoo Indian Sagwa. I had been in two hospitals without obtaining any relief for my complaint, chronic dyspepsia. I spent hundreds of dollars with various doctors and last year I went to Europe and tried many of the best physicians there, but with no better results. I was entirely discouraged with life and returned to this country. I was unable to retain anything whatever on my stomach for but a few moments at a time. I was unable to sleep. Two weeks ago I purchased as a last resort a bottle of your Sagwa. Am now on my second bottle and feel like a new being. I can eat anything and retain it. I sleep sound, get up feeling refreshed and hungry, and your Kickapoo Indian Sagwa has done all this for me. I shall never be tired of speaking in its praise, hoping to be able to benefit others who suffer." If you are dyspeptic, or you find that your food does not properly nourish you, give this wonderful remedy a trial. You will be surprised at the rapid manner in which it accomplishes its good results. Do not resort to medicines that are composed of injurious substances or mineral poisons, the temporary relief obtained from their use is more than counteracted by the reaction which follows. For all disorders resulting from a deranged condition of the liver, kidneys, stomach or blood, Kickapoo Indian Sagwa is without an equal. Remember that what you may believe to be but a trivial indisposition, such as slight local pains, sleeplessness, loss of appetite, susceptibility to catch cold, a sallow complexion, restlessness, decrease in weight, are warnings of terrible afflictions that entail a life of agony, and a premature death. Druggists everywhere sell the Kickapoo Indian Remedies.

TO REPAIR THE PARTHENON.

Plans Proposed for the Preservation of This Famous Greek Temple.

The condition of the Parthenon, the possible damage done to it by the earthquake of 1894, has already been alluded to. Many experts having examined the Parthenon, as to the best method of preserving this marvel of Greek art, the subject is yet under discussion. Ernest Ziller states that the earthquake did the Parthenon little, if any, harm. The worst accident to it happened when the Morosini laid siege to the Acropolis in 1687. Ziller proposes using a particular cement, and holding together the cracked stones. He wants "no modern patchwork." Ziller represented a minority report. The majority report, headed by Prof. Doerofeld and Theophilus, devoted their attention to the architrave and other injured portions of the Parthenon. They want to remove the broken block of the architrave, to use iron bars to support other parts, and to introduce new stone, but this new stone to be made out of old material, so that no patching can be visible. Nothing having been decided upon, a third expert, Prof. Julius Durm, has been called on. He deems the architrave to be hopelessly ruined, and thinks it ought to be entirely restored. It is future consequences he dreads—natural distegration brought about by rains and frost. According to the Athenaeum, Durm emphasizes between what "is urgent and not urgent, necessary and desirable, what must be done and what might be done." About $10,000 would be the sum required for the pressing wants of the Parthenon, and $40,000 would cover all the outlay. There was some difference of opinion when the matter of workmen was entered on, as Durm wanted Germans or Italians in preference to Greeks. And so the matter stands. The last expert is M. Mange. M. Mange is opposed to "stone cementing or any similar process of restoration." His idea is to rivet in the loose stones by means of iron or copped hooks. He describes how difficult would be the removal of unsound parts, on account of the old way the Greeks had of mortising their stones, and using lead, which fastened the lower blocks. He dreads that careless repairs or tinkerings might bring down the whole western cornice. There is no question as to M. Mange's superior acquaintance with the methods of the original Greek builders.—New York Times.

STEAM ENGINE MUST GO.

Electric Power to Be the Propeller of the Future.

It is only a matter of time when electric roads will be established between all important cities. The substitution of the electric motor and special devices for fast travel may be delayed by the managers of steam railways, whose business will be injured thereby, but the change has got to come. Present methods are not in keeping with the progressive science of the age. The steam roads carry a ton of car weight for every passenger they transport, where only 400 pounds will be required with the new system. The slaughter of people by crossing roads built at grade on the surface must be stopped, and this is one way to avoid it. Why should the mails occupy twenty-four hours in transit between New York and Chicago, when the distance can be covered in eight hours? Why should passengers be bothered with sleeping car accommodations to make a journey that can be accomplished within the short hours that now constitute a legal working day?

In the Brott system locomotives are dispensed with. The motors are on the axles, under the cars. Hence it is possible to dispense with the mighty locomotive, that has to be made nearly as heavy as the whole train in order to secure a proper hold upon the track. Now that ocean steamers have so closely approached railroad speed, it is high time that the land roads forged ahead before the designers of water craft catch up.—Lippincott's.

A FAMOUS PAPER.

Made at Oxford, and Its Secret Known to Only Three Persons.

The printing house conducted by the monks of Neuvillé Montreuil-sur-Mer, in the Pas de Calais province, in the north of France, where the whole of the service books of the Carthusian order, for use throughout the world, are printed, is unique. Copies of these works cannot be purchased; they are only issued to members of the order. They are most beautiful productions, printed on the finest paper, which is hand-made, bearing the water-mark of the order. They are made in all sizes, from royal folio to smaller royal quarto, in red and black type, with music and initial letters. The monks of this establishment also cast their own type and bind their own books, and carry out all the different branches, even to designing their own letters, wood engraving and photo-typography. The university press of Oxford is not only one of the most remarkable printing establishments in the world, but also one of the oldest. It makes its own type and its own ink, makes its own paper, and so on. The famous Oxford India paper is a marvel of compression and strength, and the secret of its manufacture is known only to three persons. From no printing press in the world are so many—1,000,000 of each—Bibles and prayer books, issued annually, and types are set up in 310 foreign languages and dialects.

Atmosphere of the Stars.

The modern astronomical principle on which stars are classified, namely, the resemblance and difference between their spectra, and the revelations characterizing this remarkable phenomenon, have led to various attempts to indicate the stage of advancement attained by each particular orb in its life's history or development. Remarking upon this, a recent writer cites Dr. Scheiner as putting, in his late work on stellar spectroscopy, those stars whose spectra contain the bright lines of helium and hydrogen in the first subdivision of his first class in evolution, Beta Lyrae and Gamma Cassiopiae being two such stars; he regards them as having atmospheres composed of those gases, enormously extensive as compared with those of other stars, and possibly hotter than the gaseous envelopes of their older companions. On the basis of this theory the query is considered pertinent as to how long it may be since our world was in the condition of Beta Lyrae, whether any helium now floats in our outer atmosphere, how that particular portion which is now imbedded in the earth's crust got there, and other similar questions.—New York Sun.

Gastric Dyspepsia

And constipation troubled me for over a year. I grew worse and could hardly perform my household duties. I had severe pains in my stomach, especially at night. I treated with our physician six months without avail. I resorted to Hood's Sarsaparilla and having taken six bottles I am free from all distress in my stomach and am no longer troubled with dyspepsia." MRS. MARGARET FENNER, Indian Falls, N. Y.

One Woman's Studies.

That very clever, very successful and admirable woman, Mrs. Rorer, studied and conquered many things before she learned to cook. To begin with she had a college training at Aurora, and, having inherited a taste for chemistry from her father, who was both physician and chemist, she wished to become a pharmacist. That was before the way was smoothed for women who wished to do unusual things, and she abandoned the plan because the way was made so disagreeable by fellow-students. After that she learned wood carving and took a course in carpentering, which may account for the grace with which she uses her hands and arms. She studied cooking for the good of her family, and it was with the same thought and to build up one of her own children, who was delicate, that she gained that scientific knowledge that since has made her a benefactor to so many other mothers.—New York Post.

The Cyclist's Paradise.

I suppose it has been said over and over again already, but I must say once more, that for cyclists who are satisfied with a ride of eight or ten miles, Paris is a paradise. True, the boulevards are not much pleasanter or safer than Regent street and Piccadilly; but the moment you leave the Rue Royale and dart across the Place de la Concorde you feel as if you were flying through the air rather than trundling an earthly wheel over the dull soil. It is not entirely the intoxication of the air, not altogether the goodness of the going, not the pleasant company you see around you; but all these, and perhaps something else not to be put into words, combine to set you on such good terms with yourself that by the time you have passed the Arc de Triomphe and see the Bois at the end of a mile and a half of exquisite road, you feel that life can have but few happier moments to offer you.—London Realm.

Ethel—How did you like it up there on the stage? I should have thought you'd be frightened to death.

Sylvia—Why, it was just splendid to cast an eye over the audience, to see their looks and actions. Really, it was as good as a play.

Ethel—Was it, really? Next time I'll go on the stage instead of sitting among the audience.—Boston Transcript.

Second Old Vet—Doorkeeper in the patent office.

First Old Vet—How came you to fail on that?

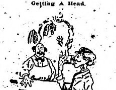
Getting A Head.



His Error.

He was a new man in New York, evidently a country product, and as he rode up town the other afternoon in a cable car, he sat in the corner trying to read his newspaper while several women held on by the straps. He watched them furtively as they swayed to and fro, changing his eye every now and then to the men who occupied seats as he did. None of them moved and didn't show any signs of moving, and at last he gently pulled at one of the women's dresses and got up.

"Excuse me, ma'am," he said, so everybody could hear him, "I thought I was the only hog in the car, but I see I'm mistaken."—New York Sun.

Close of the Tenting Season.

The belated train continued to drag its slow way along, while the man on the front seat kept up his ceaseless growling.

"If you're so all so allfired hungry," grunted the fat passenger, "why don't you buy a sandwich of the boy, and quit bothering the rest of us?"

The man on the front seat laughed sardonically.

"A sandwich?" he cried, clenching his hands savagely, "a sandwich? What do you take me for—ha! ha! ha!" just that-a-way.

Autumn Tragedy.

Her eyes were downcast as she spoke.

"No, Mr. Skimpton," she said, "the dream is over. I can never be your wife."

"Spare me this cruel blow," he said, in a choking voice. "I thought you loved me."

"I did love you," she went on, without raising her eyes. "Perhaps I love you yet. But I can never wed a man who tries to black his russet shoes."—Washington Star.

Thought of Herself.

Friend of the Saunterer has a decidedly original little daughter. One day the teacher discovered her in a hand-to-hand combat with a child of her own age.

"Don't you know you are doing very wrong?" said the teacher, rebukingly, "and that such evil actions are caused by the promptings of the devil?"

"Well," was her answer, "maybe the devil did tell me to pull her hair; but I thought of spitting in her face all by myself."—Boston Budget.

What She Wanted.

Although poor, he loved the girl with tropical warmth and Oriental splendor.

"Darling," he whispered to her, in the fervor of his soul, "there is nothing you could ask of me that I would not willingly grant."

"Well, Charlie," she responded, "give me a chance to marry somebody who has a little—just a little bit—more money than you have; that's a good boy."—Boston Traveler.

A Generous Bequest.

A husband, feeling his end approaching, sent for a solicitor to make his will.

"I leave my wife a life-interest in a hundred thousand francs."

"Very good; but if she marries again?"

"In that case, I'll make it two hundred thousand. It is not for her, however—I leave it to her husband. Poor fellow, it will be hard-earned money."—Illustrazione Popolare.

"I know of what you are thinking," said one woman to another, one day lately. "Shall I tell you?" Her friend replied: "It is impossible for you to guess; I was worrying over a care which you do not imagine that I possess." "That is true," was the response. "I am surprised to see that you are fretting about money matters." The other stared at her. "Are you a necromancer?" she exclaimed. "No; a Sherlock Holmes," was gaily retorted. "But that is quite extraordinary. How could even a Sherlock Holmes penetrate my thoughts?" "By the observance of a simple rule. You put a finger on your chin while you sat in that long, brown study. That signifies that mercenary motives are worrying you. If you leaned your hand on your cheek I should have told you that affairs of the heart concerned you. If it was something of the brain alone, as overwork, you would have raised your hand to your head." The listener shook her head. "That sounds like a fairy tale," she said. "Nevertheless, try it any time you like," responded her friend, "and see if you ever make a mistake. And, more than that, you may tell what part of a person is affected by illness in the same way. The forehead contracts in a brain trouble, or headache, and the eyes, also, show these diseases. The nose and under eyes betray sickness in the chest and stomach, and the lips and chin may be watched for anything wrong with the lower members of the body. That really is a help in dealing with illness in a child too young to tell where it feels pain."

Senor Calvo, the representative of Costa Rica, has returned to Washington from a visit to his country, where he attended the festivities of Sept. 15, the national holiday. He says the feeling in Costa Rica is favorable to Central American union, and that such a union will be ultimately formed.

People Talked About.

At his last recital in London this year Paderewski was paid $5,435 as his share of the receipts.

The earl of Derby, who made a successful governor general of Canada, has accepted the mayoralty of Liverpool.

Calve is a Spaniard. Her real name is Emma de Roquer. She was born in Madrid of Spanish father and French mother.

Prince Christian Victor, grandson of Queen Victoria, displays great originality. He will leave a palace to go to Ashantee.

Prof. Dyche, the distinguished naturalist, is entirely self-taught. When thirteen years old he had not yet learned the alphabet.

Walter Besant is authority for the statement that there are fifty novelists in England who have incomes of $5,000 a year or over.

David J. Hill, president of University of Rochester, N. Y., has resigned, to take effect at close of present college year.

Miss Clara Campbell of Ironton, O., who some years ago secured a $40,000 judgment against Arbuckle, the millionaire coffee dealer, in a breach of promise suit, is dying at a sanitarium.

H. N. Pillsbury, champion chess player, sailed on the St. Louis for Southampton, en route for St. Petersburg, to participate in the international tournament to be played in that city.

E. D. Blakeslee, a Chicago cycling club member, completed his long journey across the continent from New York to San Francisco, and cut twenty-three hours off the record, making it in forty-seven days and nineteen hours.

George W. Gibbs, one of the most prominent merchants and philanthropists in San Francisco, died suddenly of heart failure. For many years he was president of the Young Men's Christian association. He went to California in 1849, and was seventy-one years old. He founded one of the largest iron firms on the continent.

Accidental Happenings.

Cecil Kidwell, an engineer, and Washington Price were instantly killed by a boiler explosion at Grassey, Ky.

The business part of Madisonville, Ky., was destroyed by fire. Loss, $50,000.

Forest fires are raging on the Little Kanawha, near Parkersburg, W. Va. Large tracts of woods and barns and fencing have been burned.

While driving cattle on his father's place, near Jacksonville, Ill., George Thorne's horse became unmanageable and threw his rider, who was so badly hurt that he died in a short time.

Mrs. William McClanahan, wife of the mayor of Milan, Mo., lies at the point of death at her home from the effects of a pistol in the hands of her four-year-old son Charles. It was another case of "didn't know it was loaded."

At Pittsburg, Tenn., a tenement house occupied by Irvin Robinson, a respectable colored laborer, was destroyed by fire. In the building were two of Robinson's children, aged one and four years, respectively, and both were burned.

The large five-story building on Middle street, Lowell, Mass., known as the Parker block, was almost destroyed by fire. The fire was aided by repeated explosions of whisky in barrels, which blew out the windows and created havoc in adjoining buildings. The total loss exceeds $350,000.

Dr. T. C. Minor, one of the most prominent physicians of Cincinnati, took a dose of belladonna by mistake for bromide of potassium, and his condition is serious. He was once city health officer and police commissioner, a member of the state board of health and of the national board of health.

While a number of negro converts were being immersed in the Stinson river at Fulton, Mo., by the Baptist preacher, a fifty-foot span of the Zerhardt bridge fell fifteen feet, throwing a crowd of men, women and children into water five feet deep. Many were hurt, but no one was killed. After getting them attended to, the baptismal proceedings went on.

Evil Doings.

Arthur Dacre and his wife, well known English actors, committed suicide at Sydney, N. S. W. The former cut his throat and the latter shot herself.

Thanksgiving

Between the long vacation
  And the Christmas holidays
Comes in the bright Thanksgiving,
  When our ringing cheers we raise,
In the frosty, tingling weather,
  With sheaves in barn and bin,
We haste to see the fellows,
  Their latest victory win.

Pell-mell, by train and steamer
  The merry people throng;
By the onward strength of thousands
  The crowd is swept along.
The girls, with tell-tale ribbons,
  And perhaps a tell-tale blush,
No whit behind their brothers,
  Are mingling in the rush.

Dearest Grandmammas and aunties,
  With a softly fluttering sigh,
Lament the old Thanksgiving
  As the news comes thundering by;
Then to the home's fair Mecca
  The scattered tribes returned,
And told the year's long story
  Where the great hearth fire burned.

But though we keep Thanksgiving
  In the new athletic way,
We are much like famished children
  When the sunset skies are gray,
By clans the kinsfolk gather
  In many a hungry horde,
And we finish our Thanksgiving
  At the happy family board.

A THANKSGIVING DUEL.

It was Thanksgiving day, and this is the story as it was told by Miss Pepper, the fine needle-worker, at the woman's boarding-house on Tenth street: "You see, my dears," said Miss Pepper, who was like a sweet faded old rose in the group of eager, young women about her, "the trouble with Jack Brice was this: He was heels over head in love with my cousin, Margery Lee, but he was too poor to marry.

"He lived with his uncle, Tom Brice, of the Mansion House—old Squire Brice, as all the county called him, though he wasn't more than fifty; and naturally when they both came courting Margery, her father favored the squire's suit most. But Margery favored Jack's, and showed it openly.

"A man may be as rich as Croesus, but when he's choleric and up in years—none too good in the bargain—he needn't expect to make much headway with a lovesick girl of twenty. Long-legged Jack's good looks outweighed the squire's gold, but when her father found out which was the wind was blowing he forbade Margy to see him again. She said nothing, but she was not a girl to talk. But every night she wrote him a long letter, that she would hide in a hollow tree stump, and that Jack would come and take away.

"Sometimes, too, in the early morning, hardly daylight, she would jump on her bay mare, Hornet, and dash two miles down the river to the ford, where Jack would be waiting, and would swim his horse over from the other side, just to have five minutes' talk with her.

"Ah, but they were in love, I can tell you! And I never saw a better matched pair—both so good-looking; both so full of life!

"Whether my uncle ever heard of their goings on I don't know. But he stopped talking against Jack and urging the squire's suit. He only told us, Margy and me both, for I lived with them, that old Tom had him in his power and could ruin him, and now that she wouldn't marry him he was going to take his revenge.

"Then he fell sick, and seemed likely to die, and my poor cousin was in a terrible quandary.

Up and Away.

"She loved Jack, but she loved her father, too. And she felt it was worry that was killing him.

"One terrible night, when we were almost expecting my uncle to breathe his last, Margy fell on her knees and promised she'd marry the squire, and he at once began to get better with astonishing quickness.

"She wrote Jack one letter, one curt, cold letter, that she sat two days over; and that he tore in half and sent back to her, and then left the country on top of it.

"This left the field of love open to the squire, and he made the most of it, coming every afternoon to our place, spruced up like a young man, in a light black suit, and with his hair combed over his bald spot.

"He would send Margy splendid presents, too. And sometimes a love letter, a fine, proper love letter, calling her a red rose with the dew on it, a black-eyed gypsy, or some such prettiness, all of which you may be sure, though, only I ever read.

"Meanwhile the wedding arrangements were going on with wicked hurry. My uncle seemed like one posgy, numb with misery, and worn to gy, numbe with misery, and worn to a shadow with longing for Jack, said nothing. Perhaps she was afraid if too long put off she would lose courage for the sacrifice; perhaps she was all the time hoping and praying—as women can pray sometimes—for the very daring thing that did happen.

"That night, I remember, it stormed. The wind howled, and all along the country road the big oaks swung their arms and creaked as if ready to fall on our rumbling old carriage.

"It was Thanksgiving night, a festival not in favor in the South in those days, and we were going to the Mansion house to a family dinner. The wedding was only three days off now, and the squire had taken a fancy to keep it honor of his coming happiness.

"When we rolled up to the open doorway there he was, magnificent—in a rosebud satin waistcoat, and with a flower in his buttonhole, for all the world like a bedecked old turkey-cock!

"'Welcome to the Mansion house,' he said, gayly, as I bundled up the stairs first.

"And then to Margy, though quite loud enough for me to hear: 'In three short days!'—meaning, of course, the marriage that was to leave her in his home forever.

"She winced as if he had struck her, her face as white as her muslin frock, and I verily believe that if he hadn't walked her into the dining-room on his arm she would have fallen.

"What sort of a dinner did they have? Why, the best in the world, you may be sure!

"The Mansion house was the finest place in the county—for that matter in all South Carolina—and the squire knew good living, and the big mahogany table fairly groaned under cut glass and silver.

"Uncle and I were at each side, and Margy was at the foot in the place of honor; where, three times a day, she was soon to face old Tom, until death should mercifully take one or the other of them out of the world. None of us talked much; none, even my uncle, who was emptying goblet after goblet of wine to drown his thoughts. And when the squire stood up suddenly with his champagne glass to toast the bride that looked ready for the tomb—I almost welcomed the interruption that followed.

"'To the bride!' repeated the squire, glass high in the air, and was echoed by a dreadful laugh.

"'To the devil, you mean; to the devil, you old villain,' said a voice. 'He gave you money enough to buy a wife, so toast him deep!'

"And there in the middle of the floor, landed by a jump through the flung up window, was Jack, his clothes covered with mud and Satan in his eye.

"True love poisoned by wounded vanity, you see, my dears, may sleep drugged for awhile, but the time will come when it will fight like a tiger for what it feels its own.

"And this had been the case with Jack, who was now almost maddened with thinking over the coming wedding.

"'You young puppy,' roared the squire, 'didn't I tell you not to come here again?'

"'That for your telling!' said Jack, diabolically cool; and with the whirl of a long whip in his hand the squire's uplifted wineglass fell to the floor cut like a flower from the shank!

"Then followed a terrible scene, while we looked on like people in a nightmare.

"The two men seemed suddenly to turn into raging demons, but from the very first I could see Jack had the upper hand.

"He held the squire, squirming and cursing like a trooper, down in his chair as if he had been a child.

"'Margy,' he called out over his head, 'did you write me that letter of your own account?'

"And getting no answer beyond the denial of her death-white face and piteous eyes, his rage knew no bonds. 'Your friend, the devil, gave you money enough to buy a wife,' he kept saying, shaking the squire as a cat would a mouse; 'but by heaven it's only over my dead body you'll get her!'

"'Defend yourself, you old rascal,' he yelled, 'defend yourself, for, kin or [illegible]'

"There was a pair of swords crossed on the wall, slender, piercing, murderous dueling swords, and, tearing them down, he flung one to his uncle, and in a moment they were fighting like mad, parrying, thrusting and feinting, with a dexterity sickening to see.

"For the squire, you must understand, was an experienced swordsman; he had pinked his man in his time; but, fired by love and hate, and always a good fencer, Jack was a match for him. One moment it was he who was doing the parrying. The next it was the squire. And presently, as if in a dream, I could see my uncle and Prince, the negro butler, standing on chairs and putting out the candles that were fastened to the antlers of the deer heads against the walls, in the hope that this would stop them.

"But it did nothing of the sort; it only made them all the more determined to kill each other; and directly in the pitch dark, after a moment's groping—groping that sent an icy chill to the roots of my hair—their swords clashed, and we knew that the duel was not yet over.

"Margy fell in a faint across my lap and my uncle began to pray.

"All I could think of was to hope that Jack would beat, and with my heart in my mouth, I sat staring at the sparks that flew from their swords and waiting for the end.

"At last, after an eternity of time, a time made up of appalling silences and mad, blind, loomings together—and again that hideous groping—there was a cry, a fall, and when the frightened negro had made a light again, there was the squire, pinned by Jack's sword, through an ear, to the floor, and there outside the window were Jack and Margy clinging to each other on the same horse and ready to dash off into the night.

"Well, my dears," said little Miss Pepper, mildly, in conclusion of her spirited recital, "of course, they got married and lived happy ever after.

"And equally, of course, the squire melted in time and forgave them, and tore up the notes he held against my uncle.

"And to this very day, if any of you should go to Buck Forest, anybody there will tell you how Jack Brice won his bride on Thanksgiving night."—St. Louis Republic.

True Thanksgiving.

"True thanksgiving is complete consecration—the sincere and devout acknowledgment of God's claims upon us by the bringing of every power into cheerful subjection to the divine will. That, however, is the Thanksgiving of the individual soul within the sacred precincts of its most exalted consciousness, where God and the soul are in communion. The more formal Thanksgiving to which the people are summoned by the proclamations of their chief magistrates in recognition of God's bountiful providence, appeals to the individual as a member of the community and a sharer in the common benefits which come to the people through the goodness of God. Yet here the same question may be asked: "What shall I do, the citizen, the neighbor, the individual member of society, render unto God for all the benefits which I share, in common with others, for the order, peace and prosperity of the community, and which each person enjoys, because there is a community of interest and of life?"—Northern Christian Advocate.

"What do you want?" she asked of the tramp, who had made his way around to the kitchen door.

"Nothin' much, ma'am," he replied, with a politeness that awakened her suspicion.

"Money, I suppose. We don't give tramps money."

"No'm. I don't want no money."

"Well, we have no victuals, except for dinner, and they ain't done yet."

"I don't even ask for none of yer dinner, ma'am. All I want is some dry bread; jes' dry bread."

She was touched.

"Poor man!" she exclaimed. "Here, I'll give you a piece of pie, anyhow."

"No'm. I druther hev the dry bread."

"Do you like it?"

"No; but yer see, me an' the rest of the boys hez hustled aroun' till we've got a turkey an' some celery, an' some cranberry sauce, an' some plum puddin', an' all we want know is jes' the dry bread ter make the stuffin' of."—Detroit Free Press.

ANNUAL REPORTS

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL AND DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

Mr. Wilson Says That There Would Not Be a Deficiency if the Other Branches of the Government Were Compelled to Pay Postage—Figures Showing the Operations of the Mint During the Past Fiscal Year.

Washington, Nov. 26. — Postmaster General Wilson has made his first annual report to the president. The receipts of the postoffice department for the year ending June 30, 1895, were $76,171,000, and the expenditures $86,790,172. It is gratifying, says the report, that a large portion of the deficiency occurred in the first quarter of the year, and that revenues are increasing with returning prosperity. Mr. Wilson estimates the revenue for the year ending June 30, 1897, at $89,703,120, and the expenditures at $94,817,900, the difference to be made up by congressional appropriation. In speaking of the deficiency Mr. Wilson says:

"The regular annual deficiency in the revenues of the postal service, emphasized as it appears to be by the unusual amount of the deficiencies for the past two years, may call forth comment from those who believe that the postoffice department should be self-sustaining; but it should be remembered that the free business done by the department for other branches and departments of the government, if paid for at regular or cost rates, would more than wipe out the deficiencies."

Mr. Wilson recommends legislation to prevent abuse of the second class privileges. He also favors the extension of the civil service system.

Figures on Coinage.

The director of the mint has submitted his report to the secretary of the treasury. The value of the gold deposited at the mints and assay offices during the fiscal year was $87,482,082, of which $65,161,007 were original deposits and $22,321,022 were redeposits. The value of the silver deposited during the fiscal year was $15,714,365, of which $15,234,760 were original deposits and $479,605 redeposits. The coinage by the mints during the year was: Gold, $43,933,415; silver dollars, $3,956,011; subtreasury silver coins, $5,1[illegible]469; minor coins, $712,594, a total coinage of $58,715,649. In addition to the coinage executed by the mints during the year, gold bars were manufactured of the value of $43,153,370 and silver bars to the value of $10,311,548.

The average London price of silver bullion during the year was 29d, equivalent to 63.8 cents. The highest price of silver during the year was 68 cents, and the lowest price, 59.8 cents. At the average price of silver bullion during the fiscal year, the ratio of gold to silver was 1 to 32.5 and the bullion value of a United States silver dollar was $0.49168.

The value of the gold and silver estimated to have been used in the industrial arts during the calendar year of 1894, was approximated at $21,511,652, of which $10,658,604 was gold and $10,883,048 was silver.

The estimated metallic stock in the United States on July 1, 1895, was gold, $636,229,825; silver, $625,853,949, a total of $1,262,048,774.

The estimated product of gold and silver in the United States during the year 1894, was gold, $39,500,000; silver, 49,500,000 fine ounces, of the commercial value of $31,422,000, and the coining value of $64,000,000.

The estimated production of the world for the calendar year was gold, $180,626,100; silver, coining value, $216,892,200; commercial value, $106,522,900.

Mr. Preston in a review of the monetary legislation of the country states that the real demonetization of silver took place in 1853, when the weight of the divisional coins was reduced about 7 per cent. Thus, he says, it was not an accident or an oversight; it was expressly declared in the house of representatives that the intention was to make gold the sole standard of value in the large transactions and silver subservient to it for small ones. The act of 1873, he says, was only nominal.

Railroad Earnings.

The interstate commerce commission has just issued a preliminary report on the income and expenditures of railways in the United States for the year ending June 30, 1895, prepared by the statistician. The report includes the returns from 650 roads whose reports were filed on or before November 9, 1895, and covers the operations of 164,529 miles of line, or 92 per cent of the mileage in the United States. The gross earnings were $1,003,022,853. The operating expenses were $677,667,635, leaving net earnings of $320,137,670 for the same roads in 1894. Reduced to a mileage basis, gross earnings were $6,096; operating expenses, $4,119, and net earnings, $1,977, or a decrease in gross earnings of $13 per mile, as compared with last year, and of $1,094 per mile as compared with 1893; a decrease in operating expenses of $44 per mile as compared with 1894, and of $757 per mile as compared with 1893. Net earnings show a gain over 1894 of $31 per mile of line, but a decrease of 377 per mile as compared with 1893.

Shot While Hunting.

Rich Valley, Minn., Nov. 26.—Geo. A. Klein, son of a wealthy farmer here, accidentally shot Dr. Waldo Ohman while out hunting early this morning. The bullet entered the left side near the heart and he is not expected to recover.

To morrow is our National Thanksgiving day and we have many things to be thankful for. Nature has this year been over abundant we have raised the largest and best crop of everything that this country has ever seen. were it not for the cupidity of mankind our people would be the most prosperous and happy on earth. Let us be thankful that few will suffer want the coming winter which is a great deal more than many localities can say.

This is the season when estrays are numerous. If you take up an animal you must comply with the law or become its victim. within ten days after you have taken the animal within your enclosure you must notify the town clerk of your township, who must make an entry of the fact. Then insert an advertisement in the local paper, and 60 days afterward apply to the justice of the peace to sell the estray. He will issue warrant to a constable and ten days after the latter has posted his notices the sale takes place and you are paid your expenses. The owner of an astray can make lots of trouble if you have not observed the law.—Wadena Pioneer.

A CALL.

Crookston, Minn; Nov. 20, 1895

Notice is hereby given, that a delegate convention has been called to meet in this city on Thursday, Dec 12 1895, at 10 o'clock a. m, for the purpose of considering the most efficient means of alleviating the distress and hardship endured by the people of Northern Minnesota and North Dakota, incident to the present inadequate supply of lumber and fuel. Almost at our very door lies the boundless forests of northern Minnesota, embraced by the Red Lake Indian reservation, a small portion of which would be ample to supply the wants and needs of our people on the prairies of these states.

The people have been waiting for the opening of this timber region from year to year, and it is for the purpose of giving this subject the most careful and deliberate consideration that the Commercial Union of this city invites delegations from every town and city in this section, interested in this matter to attend the convention, in the hope that something may be speedily done to bring relief.

And now it is the venerable C. M. Loring, of Minneapolis, his turn to succumb. A few years ago he was a millionaire, to-day he is a financial wreck. The Midway News can name hundreds of the best men of St. Paul and Minneapolis, who, prior to the repeal of the Sherman clause, were worth $50,000, $100,000, $500,000, a million dollars, who to-day are practically paupers. But for character and reputation they would fall a charge on the public. Can anything be more sad? Can a financial policy responsible for such dire results be regarded otherwise than criminal? Thousands and thousands of people worth a few hundred or a few thousands dollars, unfortunately invested in property, are left penniless by the sheriff sale, and hundreds of thousands of industrious, business people and agricultural people, the very ones upon whom all progress and production actually rest, are still paying interest but paying it in a currency appreciated fifty percent upon obligations contracted upon the basis of a depreciated currency! Can anything be more pitiable than to see capable, enterprising American people thus immolate themselves before this brutal British moloch? Can anything be more frozing than the hyenacical leer of these very victims of this Jewish jaggernaut this golden god, as they prate about honest money and heap denunciation upon those who hesitate in thus offering their bodies, their hearts and their very souls as a burning sacrifice in this hellish pool? Poor Loring! Poor Conght Poor Wrecks, everywhere! It is the men of generous impulse men with kind hearts men who cannot see their friends swallowed up by the boa constrictor of finance without extending a helping hand over whom this awful viper seems to take most delight The awfulest thing of all is to observe this terrible scene and for one to feel his inability to stay its devastation.—Midway News.

Nothing but words of encouragement and determination are heard on all sides. While some good men have fallen for the time, there have been some good men elected to fill their places. Taken as a whole, the People's Party is the only one that can point with pride to the methods and results of election.—National Watchman.

BURIAL ALIVE.

Popular Fear of It and Devices to Prevent Its Occurrence.

"When once the dread of being buried alive takes hold of a man, he usually becomes a maniac on the subject. The terror of the awful possibility of the thing seems to become a sort of second nature to him, and he spends the rest of his life in devising ways and means to prevent such a calamity happening to himself or to other persons."

The speaker was a man connected with one of Chicago's largest cemeteries, and the incident which brought out the remark was a remarkable one. A man in walking through the cemetery had seen a grave which was not filled in, although the coffin was deposited in it. Instead of the earth being thrown in the grave was covered with boards. On these boards were the flowers that had been used at the funeral. The men connected with the cemetery seemed disinclined to talk about the incident, but finally one was found who was willing to tell what it meant.

"There is a woman in that grave," he said. "Her husband is a prominent Chicagoan and is what might be called a crank on the subject of being buried alive. When his wife died, he delayed the funeral as long as possible, but even then the idea that his wife might yet be alive seemed to haunt him. At his request tests were applied, and he was assured there was no possibility of any spark of life remaining. But he had read of cases where even the doctors had been mistaken, and he resolved to take no chances. So he made arrangements with the cemetery management to allow the grave of his wife to remain open a certain length of time. He comes here every day, but this morning he said that the grave could be filled in tomorrow."

Then the man talked of some of the schemes and ideas that possess the minds of some men and women who are filled with the dread of being buried alive or of fearing that some of their friends might meet such a horrible fate. He told of some of the devices that have been invented with this motive in view and of the time spent by managers of cemeteries in listening to the inventors.

"One man," he said, "has a scheme by which he would fix a wire in the coffin of a person when it was buried. This wire is to be carried into the office of the cemetery, and the thing is to be arranged so that with the slightest movement in the coffin an alarm will be set off in the office or wherever the wire leads. Then the idea is for all haste to be made in disinterring the coffin and if possible save a life.

"Another man would place chloroform in the coffins of all persons. Then if the occupant should happen to be alive and should make the least movement the chloroform would be released in such a way as to quickly end the matter and prevent the unlucky victim from enduring any of the horrors of the situation. In this case there is no way of knowing whether the person was alive or dead when buried.

"Another way to insure death is by means of the old dagger plan. Like the chloroform idea, it merely provides for death in case it has not taken place before burial. This dagger idea is from the Italian, and the plan of it is that as soon as a certain weight of earth rests on the coffin lid a powerful spring is released which in its turn releases a dagger so placed that it will penetrate the heart of the person in the coffin. This idea has been used for years in some parts of Italy, but I have never heard of any one placing such a contrivance in a coffin in Chicago, although of course it could be done, and nobody but those who did it would be the wiser. Sensible people, however, when in doubt about death having taken place will have the coffin placed in the vault, and then it can be watched daily until there is no doubt as to dissolution."—Chicago Tribune.

We Favor Europe.

"I have a new question which I ask nine out of ten of my friends," said United States Marshal John Henry McCarty yesterday, "and I find that less than 1 per cent answer it in the affirmative."

"What's the question?" queried United States District Attorney Macfarlane.

"Have you ever climbed to the top of the statue of Liberty?" replied the little marshal.

"No," returned Mr. Macfarlane, "and I never will."

"That's the answer I usually got," rejoined Mr. McCarty. "If the statue of Liberty was located in Europe, what a scramble Americans would make to climb up to the top of her light shedding torch!"—New York Mail and Express.

LINCOLN'S EDUCATION.

How He Got It and the Difficulties He Had to Master.

With all this hard living and hard work Lincoln was getting in this period a desultory kind of education. Not that he received much schooling. He went "by littles." He says, "In all it did not amount to more than a year." But more or less of the schoolroom is a matter of small importance if a boy has learned to read and to think of what he reads. And that this boy had learned. His stock of books was small, but he knew them thoroughly, and they were good books to know—the Bible, Æsop's "Fables," "Robinson Crusoe," Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," a "History of the United States," Weems' "Life of Washington" and the "Statutes of Indiana." These are the chief ones we know about. He did not own them all, but sometimes had to borrow them from the neighbors, a practice which resulted in at least one casualty, for Weems' "Life of Washington" he allowed to get wet and to make good the loss he had to pull fodder three days. No matter. The book became his then, and he could read it as he would. Fortunately he took this curious work in profound seriousness, which a wide awake boy would hardly be expected to do today. Washington became an exalted figure in his imagination, and he always contended later when the question of the real character of the first president was brought up that it was wiser to regard him as a godlike character, heroic in nature and deeds, as Weems did, than to contend that he was only a man who, if wise and good, still made mistakes and indulged in follies like other men.

Besides these books he borrowed many. He once told a friend that he "read through every book he had ever heard of in that country for a circuit of 50 miles." From everything he read he made long extracts, using a turkey buzzard pen and brier root ink. When he had no paper he would write on a board, and thus preserve his selections until he secured a copy book. The wooden fireshovel was his usual slate, and on its back he would cipher with a charred stick, shaving it off when covered. The logs and boards in his vicinity were always filled with his figures and quotations. By night he read and worked as long as there was light, and he kept a book in the crack of the logs in his loft, to have it at hand at peep of day. When acting as ferryman in his nineteenth year, anxious no doubt to get through the books of the house where he boarded before he left the place, he read every night "till midnight," so says his roommate.

In his habits of reading and study the boy had little encouragement from his father, but his stepmother did all she could for him. Indeed between the two there soon grew up a relation of touching gentleness and confidence.—Ida M. Tarbell in McClure's Magazine.

Equality the Ideal of Society.

The ideal of society is equality, because to the more enlightened and to all in their more enlightened moments inequality is irksome and offensive. You can have no pleasure of the man you look up to or the man you look down on. The thing is impossible. Your soul is always seeking the level of your companions, and society formulates and expresses this instinctive desire for equality. The prince, the distinguished person, if he is a gentleman, will do his best to efface your difference when he meets you in society, and it will be your fault or your misfortune if you cannot let him do so. He will not ask you to be a snob or a toady. Inequality bores him; he is glad to get rid of it, and this is the mood of all good society. The better society is the more it shuns formality and seeks ease and freedom. The aristocrats, the highest equals, call each other by their first names, their nicknames, when they are by themselves as the plebeians do.—"Equality as the Basis of Good Society," by W. D. Howells, in Century.

Wood.

Soft wood becomes stronger than hard wood under pressure. The case of a block of Oregon pine taken from the middle of an upright which formed a part of the timber support of the Comstock mines for 12 years gives an example of the effect of heavy pressure on wood fiber. It is so hard that it cannot be cut with a knife, and one of its sides is polished from the squeezing it has undergone. Yellow pine from the lower levels of the Comstock has been so compressed by the enormous weight that its density exceeds that of lignum vitae.—New York Tribune.

A Modest Beggar.

A beggar stopped a lady on the steps of a church.

"Kind lady, have you not a pair of old shoes to give me?"

"No, I have not. Besides those you are now wearing seem to be brand new."

"That's just it, ma'am—they spoil my business."—Riforma.

WAS A THREE-LEGGED WOMAN.

A Secret of the Freak Trade Revealed by Death.

"Three-legged Magnolia" has killed herself in New York. She had only two legs, and she died in possession of that number, but she had made her fame through the exhibition of a third, supplied to her by another woman.

Magnolia appeared in the Midway Plaisance. "The only three-legged woman from Tennessee" was a powerful attraction. Magnolia sat with her back against a screen, in which a hole had been made, and through this screen a woman, hired at $1 a day, pushed her leg under Magnolia so that it appeared that the blushing Southern girl owned a trio of limbs.

He Grew Very Rapidly.

Thomas Hall, the second child of Thomas and Margaret Hall, born at Willingham, was probably the greatest grower in the history of the world. At 2 years and 11 months he was three feet nine inches high; his strength was such as to overcome any boy of 8 years; he had a man's voice; and he weighed nearly sixty pounds. He threw with great facility, and without the aid of a springboard or any mechanical appliance, a blacksmith's hammer, which weighed seventeen pounds, and he lifted about 170 pounds. Between August 28 and November 30, 1741, he grew two inches and a half in height. When he died, an old man at the age of 6, he was four feet six inches high, and he weighed almost 200 pounds.—Boston Journal.

No More Rice at Weddings.

Rice at weddings is doomed. A correspondent of the London Telegraph says that in the upper ranks of society the vegetable grains are discarded and their place supplied by paper confetti. These articles are about half the size of an ordinary letter wafer and are stamped in all colors. They are soft and pleasant to the touch, and fall upon the bride's shoulders like the gentle rain from heaven without wetting her dress or veil. The confetti can do no harm either to hat, clothes or face, and if a few stray down the back of the bridesmaid or best man, they cause no uneasiness at the breakfast table, for they can be sat upon with a delightful sense of ease. Exit rice—enter confetti.

WASHINGTON SWORE.

THE FATHER OF HIS COUNTRY PROFANE FOR ONCE.

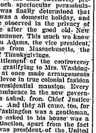
Angry With Riotous Banqueters—A Turkey, an Oath and a Broken Nose—A Hitherto Unpublished Story—Our National Holiday.

The first national Thanksgiving day ever observed by the United States of America owes its historic interest to one broken nose and an oath. To the oath we owe the supremacy of the turkey as our national feast day bird, and to the broken nose we owe the only evidence that has come down to us that George Washington ever swore. Yet all these important things are collateral to the main fact that we narrowly escaped losing Thanksgiving after all, and that all the famed men of that day got into a very bitter quarrel over it and ate a turkey dinner at daggers drawn, so to speak.

The idea of having such a national holiday at all originated in the fertile brain of Alexander Hamilton. Hamilton was then secretary of the treasury, and in August, 1789, he broached the matter at one of the meetings of President Washington's cabinet. To be sure, there had been Thanksgivings in this country from time immemorial before our government was born, but the first celebration of a genuinely national character was the one appointed by George Washington of glorious memory. This correspondence is now in the possession of the Schuyler Hamiltons and is authority for this hitherto unpublished history.

It was in September, 1789, that the matter was brought to the attention of congress. Representative Boudinot of New England moved that, in view of the blessings so abundantly bestowed on the country by the Almighty, a day of Thanksgiving be set apart by the president. The resolution was supported by Representative Sherman of Connecticut, but it aroused violent opposition. Many members of congress denounced the proposition as effete and monarchical, and we have the authority of Representative Muhlenberg of Pennsylvania for the statement that some members grew so personal in their discussions of the matter that blows were exchanged on the streets of New York. It appears from the Hamilton letters, and the fact will certainly surprise the historians, that Jefferson and Hamilton immediately differed as to the desirability of the holiday. Jefferson was opposed to the idea because it seemed undemocratic. He was then, of course, fresh from his long residence in free-thinking France. Anything that savored of prayer and church observance in the government was opposed to his extreme views in the matter of separation of church and state. He expressed these views with moderation and good sense in a concise letter, for he had as yet hardly assumed the reins of office. Unfortunately, the letter which Washington is said to have addressed to Alexander Hamilton on the subject is lost.

The resolution went through congress, however, and Washington duly appointed the last Thursday of November, 1789, as the first of one long line of national Thanksgivings. Immediately another acrimonious contest was begun. How was the day to be observed? It was proposed to have a monster procession of dignitaries, headed by Washington himself on horseback. Jefferson's opposition to anything of the kind effectively prevented such spectacular perambulation. It was finally determined that the day was a domestic holiday, and should be observed in the privacy of the home after the good old New England manner. This much we know from John Adams, the vice president, who came from Massachusetts, the mother of Thanksgivings.

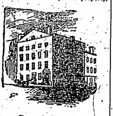


John Peter Gabriel Muhlenberg.

This settlement of the controversy was most gratifying to Mrs. Washington, who at once made arrangements to hold a levee in true colonial fashion in the presidential mansion. Every one of prominence in the new government was asked, from Chief Justice Jay down. And they all came, too, for George Washington was a gentleman, and to be asked to his house was a social distinction, apart from the fact that he was president of the United States.

Now it seems that Alexander Hamilton, eager to do anything calculated to put Thomas Jefferson to confusion, had been organizing all manner of festivities and observances likely to make of Thanksgiving a noisy holiday. Jefferson, on the contrary, had held somewhat aloof from the whole thing, for he had too great pride in his superiority to all affairs of a religious nature, and he looked upon Thanksgiving as a religious contrivance entirely. By the time the day arrived there had been engendered much unpleasant feeling between the cabinet factions, and this unpleasant feeling was communicated to the respective partisans of the two cabinet leaders. The friends of Jefferson did what they decently could to ignore Thanksgiving altogether, as John Adams' letters show very emphatically. Hamilton's partisans, on the contrary, did all in their power to make the day a success, and when the state of affairs was made known in Boston and in Philadelphia, the battle was heartily entered into. Washington had the mortification of seeing that his day of thanksgiving for the blessings of Almighty God had become a source of no end of contention.

However, the day dawned bright and even warm for New York. The bells of Trinity were rung for an hour and there was a parade of one regiment, reviewed by Hamilton from from Fraunce's tavern. Then the cheering part of the day begun by indulgence in various forms of stimulating percolations, and every one no doubt was very thankful. Washington went to church in the morning, and at high noon began to receive his visitors. It was well on in the afternoon that Hamilton's little dinner began. It was rather a famous little dinner in its day and generation, although it is never talked of nowadays. It was eaten at Fraunce's and was the first official Thanksgiving banquet in our history. Hamilton was to respond to a toast and then go off to the president's mansion, but it seems the secretary of the treasury was behind time, and there occurred at the dinner table what would now be called a disagreement among gentlemen. We have much and detailed information about it in Hamilton's letters. In the first place Lieut. St. Clair, a nephew of famed Arthur St. Clair, took occasion to say, upon his honor as a gentleman, that he was sober. An unhistoric personage of whom we know no more than that his name was Tisdal, and that he was an alderman and notary, impeached the veracity of Lieut. St. Clair, and defied him to prove it. The lieutenant thereupon threw a bottle at nobody in particular and missed his aim. In an instant, as they say in novels, all was confusion, and then, like a god out of a machine, in walked Alexander Hamilton. The scene that met his gaze, according to John Adams' account of it, was shameful. Viands and glassware and gentlemen were all massed together. However, they were separated, and Hamilton, dreading the effect of the scandal if the episode became public property, did the best to patch matters up. The skeptical alderman appears to have had his doubts upon the subject of Lieut. St. Clair's sobriety set at rest, but unfortunately there could be no doubt that the lieutenant's nose was broken in the course of debate, for the Hamilton letters distinctly say so, but we have the same authority for maintaining that it was agreed that a gentleman is at times justified in insisting that he is sober.



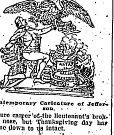
Fraunce's Tavern.

A Row About the Turkey.

The next thing that happened, according to the letters, was a dispute about the turkey. Where was the turkey? It had not been brought upon the table. There were loud shouts for turkey, but none was forthcoming. A proposition to dispense with that fowl was hooted down, and Alexander Hamilton swore—the Hamilton letters say he swore—that no citizen of the United States of America should abstain from turkey on Thanksgiving day. Well, they got a turkey somehow, and ate it. Then they drank and cheered and sang songs and sang songs and cheered and drank. They knew how to observe Thanksgiving in those days.

"This little matter attended to, Hamilton made a speech and hied him to the presidential abode. Here there had been dignified observance of the day, but it seems that some inkling of the little row at Fraunce's had got abroad already, and Washington put some questions to the secretary of the treasury about it. Both Knox and Randolph mention the exercised condition of the president, and Hamilton seems to have been influenced somewhat by his recent excitement. However it was, Washington at any rate became vexed and indulged in some pointed remarks. Readers of the history of the period remember the effective way in which Parton, Marshall and Hilliard have touched up the anger of our first president. Washington's displeasure always took the form of just resentment. He resented the whole Thanksgiving episode. John Jay gives the language of the Father of His Country on this occasion with some pretensions to exactness. Washington was incensed that a young soldier should have broken his nose in a tavern brawl while professing to be giving thanks for heaven's best gifts. Our first president went so far as to say that it was disgraceful "by God." "By God, sir!" was the most blasphemous imprecation in the Washington vocabulary, and he used it twice to Hamilton. The first occasion was on this unhappy Thanksgiving. At the second, Hamilton quitted his master.

Thus, in a bundle of family letters, does the forgotten episode lie preserved. Like many another event of the time, it has passed out of human knowledge, and the printed correspondence of the great ones of the time, in which allusion of it is made, reposes amid dust heaps, and is never perused by the eye of man. But it was a great event in its time, and made Thanksgiving a memorable day to our forefathers in official circles. History is silent on the subject of the future career of the lieutenant's broken nose, but Thanksgiving day has come down to us intact.



Contemporary Caricature of Jefferson.

Woman on the Wheel.

Writing in Le Cycle, a French medical man says: "With the woman the bones of the skull, arms and chest are smaller and lighter than those of man, while the pelvic bones and those of the thighs are larger and proportionately heavier. When the bones are covered with flesh the proportion is still better indicated and the difference more marked. The center of gravity is much lower in woman's body than in man's. This gives her greater agility and a more perfect equilibrium. Her hips are more developed and heavier, the thighs shorter and larger, which enables her to hold herself in the saddle better, and, relatively, her lower limbs are stronger. With man, on the contrary, the upper part of the body and the arms are more developed, which, from a cycling standpoint, is not good. Woman, therefore, because of her structure, should be a better cyclist than a man.

A Motorman's Life.

FULL OF HARDSHIPS, EXPOSURE AND CONSTANT DANGER.

The Great Strain on a Man's Nerves Sufficient in Itself to Wreck Him in a Short Time. The Experience of a Well-Known Motorman.

From the Cincinnati, Ohio, Enquirer.

The life of a motorman is not a bed of roses. He is subjected to many hardships especially in the winter when he is exposed to the cold and snow. Even in the summer he must bear the intense heat which beats down upon him. Considerable nerve and self-possession is necessary in a good motorman, for the lives and limbs of his passengers are at stake. One of the best known electric motormen in this city is William Frazer, who is at present running a car on the Cummins-ville electric line. He is not only well known to his fellow employes but to the people who travel on his car. Mr. Frazer is a young man about twenty-six years of age and resides with his wife and child at 144 Betts Street, Cincinnati, O. About a year ago Mr. Frazer was taken with serious stomach troubles. He bought several kinds of medicine which were recommended to him, but none of them seemed to give him even temporary benefit. An enthusiastic admirer of that famous remedy known as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People told him to try them. Frazer was almost discouraged, but took the advice. To a reporter for the Enquirer he said:

"I can most heartily recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They are all that is claimed for them, in fact they advertise themselves better than any medicine I ever saw. I was seized some time ago with a bad attack of indigestion. My stomach hurt me nearly all the time and I could not digest my food. The pain was almost unbearable and I found nothing that would give me relief. I confess that when I bought the first box of Pink Pills I hadn't much confidence in their efficacy because I had tried so many things without success that I was almost discouraged. Before I had taken one box I was decidedly better. Two boxes cured me entirely. While I have been under the weather from other causes my indigestion has never returned. If it ever should I know just what to do. I have so much confidence in the efficacy of Pink Pills that if I ever got real sick again with any disorder I shall use some of them. It is a pleasure for me, I assure you, to testify to the excellent qualities of these Pink Pills. They not only tone the stomach but regulate the bowels and act as a mild cathartic."

Mr. Frazer's testimonial means something. He speaks from personal experience and any one who doubts that he received the benefits stated can easily verify the assertion by calling on Mr. Frazer or seeing him some time while he is on his car.

Dr. Williams Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are sold in boxes at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or directly by mail from Dr. Williams, Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Treatment of Sprains.

It is generally within an hour after the accident that you are called in to see the case. The patient is suffering very severely, and wanting very much to know if "anything is broken." After examining for fracture, order the part to be bathed in extremely hot water, every hour or two, for a period of fifteen minutes at a time. Have the water just as hot as the patient can bear it, and apply with a sponge or cloth, rather than allow the ankle to be in the water. Then dry and let the part rest quietly, wrapped in flannels, when an application of hamamelis or veratrum and hamamelis may be made. Before retiring apply a flannel bandage tightly around the swollen part, only being careful that the circulation is not cut off. It is surprising how the hot application will relieve the pain and produce absorption and how the bandage, by pressure, prevents swelling and inflammation.—Eclectic Medical Journal.

The Business Man at Home.

Wife—That one in the corner? (Goes and peeps.) Why, bless me, what have you done, John? That's Freddy Squall from next door!—Tid-Bits.

Running Double Capacity.

In the year 1894 the De Kalb Fence Co., of De Kalb, Ill., doubled the capacity for producing their lines over 1893, which gave them an output of 20 miles per day. The demand for their goods has been so great the past season, that, in order to be able to supply their trade, they have been compelled this year to double the capacity of 1894, which now gives them an output of 40 miles per day.

This in itself speaks well for their product and merits the attention and inspection of our readers, and all that are in need of smooth wire fencing of any kind, and it will be to your interest to write for their catalogue, which describes in detail their goods, comprising the largest and most complete lines of smooth wire fencing now produced by any one plant in the country.

Lincoln's Accounting.

A writer in the Chicago News says that in his earlier life Lincoln had a very primitive method of keeping books. At the time his law partner, the Hon. John T. Stuart, represented the Springfield district in congress, Lincoln was forced, much against his will, to keep an account of some kind. The plan he adopted was somewhat remarkable. When he received a fee he divided it in halves. His half he put in his pocket. Stuart's portion he put in an envelope, and, labelling it, "Stuart's half," threw it into a drawer until Stuart's return from Washington.

They were to start from the Place de la Concorde, and, says a correspondent, each will take a turn at the machine en route. They first wheel to Switzerland, then to Italy, Turkey, Persia and China—that is to say, if nothing unusual happens to prevent them from covering all this extensive ground. At Canton they embark for San Francisco, and after having wheeled their barrow as far as Buenos Ayres, will there take passage on board a liner for Havre. SAVED BY TERRELL

GOOD WORK BY THE AMERICAN MINISTER TO TURKEY.

His Strong Representations to the Porte Results in the Saving of the Lives of American Missionaries and the Preserving of American Property—Later Advices, However Seem to Contradict These Statements.

(Copyright, by Associated Press.)

Constantinople, Nov. 27. — United States Minister Terrell has received a dispatch from Aintab, announcing the safe arrival there of the American missionaries belonging to the Central Turkish mission (Dr. and Mrs. Americus Fuller, the Rev. Charles S. Sanders, Rev. A. M. Trowbridge, Miss Ellen M. Price, and Miss Elizabeth M. Trowbridge) and the English governess, Miss McDonald. The missionaries add that full protection was afforded them by the Turkish authorities when it was demanded from the porte by Mr. Terrell. The latter now is satisfied that the 172 missionaries in Anatolia are safe. The situation here is still grave and more complicated.

From the highest authority the Associated Press is enabled to give the view of the case taken by the Turkish government. It is as follows: While admitting that the powers possess the right to have two guardships each in the Bosporus, the porte considers that the proposed increase in the number of foreign war vessels there, under the present condition of things in the Turkish empire, might excite the Mussulmans and produce an effect far from the one desired by the powers. It can be said upon authority that this is the substance of a note which the porte has sent to the representatives of the powers. A conference of the representatives will be called and a joint reply may be sent to the porte. The Turkish representatives at London, St. Petersburg Rome and Vienna will be instructed to earnestly request the four powers not to insist upon their demands in connection with the proposed extra guardships.

Many Massacred.

Constantinople, Nov. 28.—Armenians here who claim to be well informed, estimate the property losses by the disturbances in Anatolia alone at $50,000,000, while the number of people massacred is said to be 40,000.

The powers, instead of ordering their fleets away from Turkish waters, as the sultan earnestly requested, seem to be determined upon keeping them in this vicinity for an indefinite period. A portion of the British Mediterranean fleet, it is reported here, will soon leave Salonica bay for Smyrna, where the powers are mustering their fighting ships. The warships of Great Britain, expected to rendezvous at Smyrna this week, will consist of nine battleships, four cruisers and four smaller boats. The rest of the Salonica fleet will, it is said, remain at that port for the present, ready for any emergency. France has already at Smyrna one battleship, two cruisers and two smaller ships. Italy's flag floats from two battleships two cruisers and four smaller craft, in the waters of Smyrna; Russia has two cruisers on the way to Smyrna, in addition to a powerful fleet cruising in the western portion of the Black sea; the United States will be represented at Smyrna by two cruisers, and Germany has one small gunboat, but it is rumored that two German battleships are on their way. Austria has one battleship, two cruisers and two small gunboats.

Of course this is not a naval demonstration. It is simply the concentration of foreign fleets at a port agreed upon, apparently between the powers. No progress has been made in the matter of the application to the porte for firearms allowing the passage through the Straits of Dardanelles and into the Bosphorus of an extra gunboat for Great Britain, Russia, Italy and Austria, to act only as additional guard ships for their respective embassies. The ambassadors will hold a formal meeting to-day in order to decide what steps to take to put an end to the so-called "shuffling" of the porte. The accord between the powers is understood to be complete, and the impression prevails that if the firmans are not very soon granted the extra gunboats will pass the Dardanelles without the porte's permission, even if they have to be conveyed through by battleships stripped for action.

Details have been received here regarding the outbreak at Marash on Nov. 9, showing that the massacres were of the most terrible nature. The missionaries declare that many hundreds of people were killed and that all the school buildings were burned to the ground by the rioters.

London, Nov. 30.—A dispatch to the Daily News from Beyrout confirms the reports of the grave state of affairs existing in Syria and Palestine and the repeated danger in which the American missions have been placed by the riotous demonstration of the Mussulmans. The dispatch adds that the whole of Syria and Palestine is flooded with Turkish soldiers, and states that in the country between Jaffa and Jerusalem there are 60,000 troops, all raised within the last twenty days. The dispatch adds: "Troops arriving here bear the significant green flag of the prophet, instead of the Turkish flag. Jerusalem is crowded with soldiers and troops are being stationed in the tower of David, Pilate's palace and in the wilderness, outside of the Damascus gate. The ostensible purpose of the troops is to subdue the Druses."

Looks Like Trouble.

Constantinople, Nov. 29.—It is reported that the extra gun boats of the powers detailed for duty in the Bosphorus have commenced to arrive at the entrance to the Dardanelles, and are now awaiting permission to pass the straits. The ambassadors have been in communication with the palace as well as with their respective governments. One answer to the powers' request of the porte that they refrain from pressing their demand for the extra guard ships, was that they could see no reason not to support the demands of their ambassadors for more effective means of protecting the foreign residents of Constantinople in an emergency, and in the presence of their unanimous reply, it is considered in foreign official circles that the sultan has no alternative, especially in view of the ability of the powers to have the extra gunboats convoyed through the Dardanelles by battle ships if the sultan persists in his dilatory tactics. Indeed, it seems probable that the ambassadors have already determined not to wait beyond a certain time for the firmans, and therefore it may soon be announced that the gun boats are coming. A portion of the British fleet, which has been at anchor in Salonica bay for some time, is understood to have left those waters for Smyrna, and should now be quite near the entrance of the Dardanelles. That the porte anticipates trouble is evident from the fact that all the forts about the straits are now fully manned and supplied with ammunition, and have been placed in the highest state of efficiency compatible with the circumstances.

Reports Confirmed.

Trustworthy information which reached here from Marash to-day confirms the worst reports concerning the massacre which is said to have occurred there recently. It appears that the outbreak occurred on Monday, Nov. 18. The Mussulmans, apparently at a given signal, and acting in a deliberate manner, began the work of massacreing the Armenians, who, anticipating trouble, had done everything to defend themselves. The number of killed is estimated at sevral hundred men, women and children. Three buildings belonging to the American mission there, the theological seminary, academy and boarding house, were burned by the rioters, who looted the theological seminary previous to setting fire to that building. The Mussulmans killed two students belonging to the seminary. It is understood that all the American missionaries, five in number, are safe, but whether they left Marash before the disturbances broke out or whether they are under the protection of the Turkish authorities is not known, as Minister Terrell has not received any confirmation of the news that a massacre has occurred at Marash, although from the time the first rumor of trouble reached here he has been doing his utmost to communicate with the American missionaries. The authorities insist that his telegrams are not delayed, and that he receives all mail and dispatches directed to him.

Suspicious Activity.

The different divisions of the Russian Black sea fleet, regular and volunteer, are said to have been brought up to the highest point by efficiency and to be ready for immediate operations. The Black sea dock yards and coaling depots have undoubtedly, been, very busy, according to the reports of ship captains who have passed Constantinople, and the greatest activity was noticed by them in military circles. The Russian officials here claim there is nothing alarming in all this, that it occurs every year at this time and it means nothing more than the work of shifting troops and preparing troops for their winter quarters. But the steamer people coming from the Black sea assert that in all their experience they have never seen so much activity displayed at this or at any time of the year in Russian naval and military circles.

The porte to-day made another report to the ambassadors on the situation, announcing of the work of restoring order in the disturbed districts was progressing satisfactorily and that the reforms insited upon by the powers were being effected as promptly as possible under the circumstances.

London, Dec. 3. — A letter from Aden, Arabia, gives details of the Arabian revolt against the sultan in Yemen, the coffee growing district of Southwestern Arabia. The importance of the outbreak lies in its proximity to Mecca. The loss to the sultan of the Mussulman holy city would probably mean his deposition. Hence the streneous official denials which have been made of the existence of the rebellion. So far the revolt has been confined to the district around Kharmer, two days' journey from Saana, the capital of Yemen. The rebels number 45,000 Arabs, armed with Martini and Snyder rifles and led by Sayyid, a pretender to the imaunship of the whole Yemen country, who yields a great influence and collects tribute or taxes from all Arabs under Turkish rule.

Six thousand Turkish troops recently arrived at Saana from Constantinople and were distributed among the garrisons in the Kharmer district. The rebels had already captured, after severe fighting and great bloodshed, two Turkish forts at Kharmer and Balduba. In the latter 300 Turks were killed. The garrison fled to Masmer and bagged the twenty-five Sheikhs there to help to recapture Bablua. They refused and were taken to Saana and imprisoned.

Fired Upon by Turks.

An Odessa dispatch to the Daily News says: Many British captains are complaining of the provocative attitude of the Turks in the Dardanelles. Capt. Noble, of the steamer Loch Rannoch, says that a few days ago he arrived at Chanakin, in the Dardanelles four minutes after sundown. He observed that the shore on either side was lined with troops under canvass. Field cannon, only partially masked, were placed at close stages along the embankment. Two blank shots, one from each shore, were fired at the Loch Rannoch. Thinking that this was done in the course of military manouvers, Capt. Noble paid no attention, when three shells were fired, one of them coming within a yard of Capt. Noble's head.

Becoming Serious

New York, Dec. 3—A dispatch to the Herald from Vienna says: The crisis is again getting serious. The old Turkey party threaten to bring about a revolution if the sultan gives way. Russian and anti-English influences at the Yildiz Kiosk are increasing. The sultan has given the title of Pasha to Hassan Usnir, a well known Anglophobe writer, and has also accorded decorations to a number of Russian notabilities. The antagonism between the grand vizier and Sir Philip Currie is increasing, while Germany is profiting by her good relations with the powers to play the part of the "honest broker."

IN CLOUGH'S HANDS

HAYWARD'S FATE RESTS WITH MINNESOTA'S GOVERNOR.

The Ten Days Allowed for Reargument for Appeal Has Passed, and the Governor Must Now Name the Day for Hayward's Execution, Commute His Sentence or Grant a Pardon—Hayward's Only Hope.

Minneapolis, Dec. 3.— Harry Hayward's attorneys did not make an application to the supreme court for a reargument of their appeal from the order of Judge Seagrave Smith, refusing to grant a new trial. The ten days, allowed by the rules of the court for that purpose after a decision has been filed, has expired. In order that no confusion might exist as to the limit of time, Chief Justice Start issued an oral order allowing Hayward's attorneys until 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon to make their application. At that hour Clerk Reese closed the office and said that no application had been made. The chief executive of the state is now the only means of recourse for Hayward. The case is in his hands, either to name the day for Hayward's execution, commute his sentence or grant a pardon.

Several Minneapolis doctors are very anxious in regard to the coming execution of Harry T. Hayward. This very extraordinary young man has created quite an argument in the medical world, and many of the physicians are very anxious to be allowed to get at his head, and apply the saw to the skull, and the eye and the knife to the brain. With the above end in view, several physicians have been making diligent inquiries in official sources, to ascertain if there is a provision in the law where the body of a hanged criminal is to be given over to physicians for an autopsy, the same as in accidents, before it is delivered to relatives.

There is no provision whatever for holding an autopsy. The physicians have only to pronounce life extinct, and from that moment the body is the property of the relatives. There is no provision for using the knife, and even if the man when alive had stated that he was willing, it would depend wholly upon the relatives, and Mrs. Hayward will not allow such a proceeding. She will have the body removed as soon as possible, and no physician will be allowed to make scientific research there.

There are a number of people in the city who are almost certain that Harry Hayward will hang. If any one doubts that, they should take a look into a secret section of Phil Megaarden's desk, where he has filed away applications from people who want to see the hanging take place. The law specifies that a certain number of people only shall be present, and the law is very particular to designate who they shall be, and how many of them shall be present. If this was not in the way to interfere, Sheriff Holmberg would probably not disappoint any of those who make the requests.

Dash Into a Moving Car.

St. Paul, Dec. 3.—Three boys who were coasting on Sims street, between Arcade street and Payne avenue, yesterday, collided with a north-bound electric car on Greenbriar avenue. All were injured. They were Otto Wunderlich, aged eleven, left leg crushed; George Buck, aged eleven, skull crushed; Willie Quinlan, aged ten, right arm broken. It is thought that all the boys will recover. Wunderlich was taken to St. Joseph's hospital, where his leg was amputated a few inches below the knee. He will certainly recover unless another amputation is found to be necessary. The boys themselves admit that the accident was due to their own carelessness.

Mysterious Case.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Dec. 3.—H. C. Babcock, president of the Cherokee Manufacturing company, one of the most prosperous concerns of Dalton, Ga., was found lying dead in his office in that city to-day. Mr. Babcock was one of the most prominent citizens of North Georgia, and was accounted to be in comfortable circumstances. The affair is very mysterious and the coroner's jury will make a full investigation. It seems that Mr. Babcock went to his office in the best of spirits. A few minutes before the shot was fired he was talking with a gentleman relative to new machinery he was about to order for the concern of which he was president.

County Rebellion.

St. Paul, Dec. 3.—The Cass county officials have a rebellion on their hands which has culminated in secession. Fifty-five per cent of the legal voters of seventeen townships, comprising 391,680 acres of land, which, valued at $5 per acre, would be worth $1,958,400, have signed a petition requesting the recently established state commission to annex their townships to Crow Wing county. The petitioners number 482. A similar petition has been signed by 1,492 legal voters of Crow Wing county who are willing to incorporate the seventeen townships of Cass and along with them all the people who reside thereon.

He Is Now Regarded as the Pugilistic Star.

New York, Dec. 3.—Peter Maher is now the "star" of the pugilistic world. He recently met and defeated Steve O'Donnell at Maspeth, L. I., and was proclaimed the champion of the world by James J. Corbett. He has long ranked among the best fighters of the country, and though he was once defeated by Fitzsimmons, he has greatly improved since then and there are many who believe him capable of defeating anybody alive. Had the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight come off he had expressed his intention to challenge the winner.

PRIVATE DETECTIVES

Their Methods Dealt a Blow by the Chicago Grand Jury.

Chicago, Dec. 3. — The methods of private detective agencies received a blow from the grand jury to-day. The blow was at the "sweat box" methods and the illegal confinement of prisoners in private offices of these agencies. No actual indictments were returned, but the failure to indict was due to a mere technicality which State's Attorney Kern refused to waive. Every member of the grand jury voted to indict the following persons: Matthew W. Pinkerton, principal of the Pinkerton and Co.'s United States Detective agency; H. O. Deveraux, general superintendent of the same agency; Thomas or Charles Mitchell, of the same agency. The charge is conspiracy and kidnaping Walter Martin, a cousin of H. D. Wiley, private secretary to W. F. Merrill, general manager of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad. Martin was arrested by officers of the agency and confined in the agency office.

The engineer was instantly killed and the fireman was taken from the debris by the passengers in a dying condition. The sleeping car was the only one saved. Nobody else was seriously hurt. The baggage and mail were almost saved. The freight station caught fire from the wreck and was burned.

CONGRESS AT WORK

FIRST SESSION OF THE FIFTY-FOURTH CONGRESS OPENS.

Thomas B. Reed, Speaker of the Fifty First Congress, Is Elected Speaker—But Little Business Will Be Done Until Speaker Reed Names the Committees—The Senate Begins Business in a Deliberat Manner.

Washington, Dec. 3.—The first session of the Fifty-fourth congress convened at noon to-day. The time before the Christmas holidays is usually devoted to preliminary matters and the work of the session does not begin until after the recess. The new congress will probably not be an exception to this rule. The senate proceedings may be enlivened by an attempt at reorganization, but in the house nothing can be done until the committees are appointed. Speaker-elect Reed says that the committees will not be announced this week with, perhaps, a single exception—the committee on rules. This committee formulates the rules which are to govern the house during its session, and it is customary for the speaker to name it during the first week in order that it can immediately begin its labors. While it is believed that the rules of the Fifty-first congress, over which Mr. Reed presided, will be reported for the guidance of the present house, it is understood that a few changes will be made as a result of experience which are designed to still further improve the house machinery and the facilitation of public business. To-day Mr. Kerr, clerk of the last house, called the house to order. After the roll call the election of the officers nominated by the Republican caucus occurred, and as soon as Mr. Reed was formally installed as speaker, the drawing of seats, which is known as the congressional raffle, followed. This is a somewhat tedious but amusing affair, and occupied the remainder of the afternoon. Adjournments will continue probably until the committees are announced. This is the programme, but the unexpected might occur, as it so often does in the house, if some aspiring members should introduce a sensational resolution for immediate consideration.

The Senate.

began work in the usual deliberate manner. The body was called to order by Vice President Stevenson. It is not probable that the first week of congress will witness much serious effort at legislative work in the senate. If anything should be accomplished beyond the receipt of the president's message and of the recess nominations and the introduction of bills, the session would be an exception in the history of the senate. The proceedings of to-day consisted in the swearing in of newly elected members and the appointment of a committee to wait upon the president. Following precedents, the senate will adjourn in the middle of the week until the following Monday. One or two brief executive sessions for the reference of nominations are also among the probabilities for the week.

If the Republicans decide upon an effort to reorganize as is now generally conceded the Democrats will follow with a conference at which they probably will decide upon a course of action. It now appears probable that all three parties will place candidates for president pro tem in the field, and in that event the week will be enlivened somewhat by a triangular contest for this and other offices of the senate.

BATTLE IN KENTUCKY.

Murderer Killed After He Had Injured Three Men.

Cynthiana, Ky., Dec. 3. — Murderer Orville Eals, while resisting arrest by a posse to-day was shot to death after he had butchered his wife, killed an officer and badly wounded two other men. Eals was a farmer living near Browningsville, and his wife deserted him for John Fields, a tenant of the place. Eals induced his wife to return on Tuesday, and killed Fields. Eals, who defied arrest, was well armed and took refuge in a house. A large posse came upon the hut last night and to-day at dawn the attack was made. When the rush was made from the heavy timber Eals began firing. A man named McCombs fell mortally shot and two men named Wells and Herbert were seriously injured. The storming party effected an entrance to the hut and a horrible sight met their gaze. On the floor lay the mutilated body of Mrs. Eals, almost nude and covered with ugly wounds, while near her lay a bloody hatchet with which she had been killed. The party fired a fusilade of shots as it entered the hut and Eals was shot to pieces.

Senator Hill opened in Milwaukee last Tuesday evening, came to Minneapolis on Wednesday and remained over Thanksgiving, the guest of Senator Washburn, went to St. Paul Friday and to Duluth on Saturday, from which latter point he returned to Minneapolis yesterday, suffering from a severe cold contracted while enjoying the hospitality of the people of Superior. His sickness was the reason assigned for the cancellation of the six remaining dates.

St. Paul, Dec. 3.—Charles L. Lowe, convicted of murder in the third degree for having assisted in causing the death of Clara Bergh, was given seven years, the minimum sentence allowed by law for the crime. We hear a great deal about slack farmers, unskillful farmers, poor, farmers, as if farmers were the only class that contained that kind of members; there are slack and unskillful carpenters, blacksmiths, bank presidents, railroad managers, preachers and even editors. why should perfection be expected of all farmers alone among the world's workers? If there were no poor farmers there would be no virtue in being a good farmer,—F S. & H.

That car of hams had been sent from Nebraska to the seaboard by rail, a distance of 1500 miles and thence 4000 miles across the Atlantic and through the North Sea at a cost of 24 cents a 100 pounds and our rate from Grafton to Minneapolis a distance of 280 miles is 18 cents per 100 pounds. Such injustice and robbery as this makes it almost criminal to ask immigrants to share our misery under such circumstances when the air is bracing, not biting; when the fall work is over and time begins to drag a little in comparison with the busy harvest season we go out to the barn to do the chores after breakfast with a sense of impatience at the emptiness of our days. To be sure there's a bit of mending to be done on the plow harness, and the chore take some time, and we might take a load of wheat to town, since some few provisions are needed by the good wife but that isn,t satisfying If only one could be in the old home to-day there would be no lack of something to do With all the visiting old friends, renewing acquaintances, and half forgotten memories in the dear old provinces and—why not—yes, why not—to what better use could you put part of the value of your bountiful crop. $40.00 will buy a round trip ticket to Montreal with stop over priveleges via the Great Northern Railway, whose local agent will cheerfully detailed information.

The Times gave out on Saturday the good news that permission had been granted the Indians to cut and market the dead and burned pine on the white Earth and Red Lake reservations, The regulations under which this work will be carried on are as follows. The logs are to be sold in the spring of 1896 to the highest bidder for cash at public auction, or by sealed proposals after advertisement. It is provided, however, that the Indians may enter into contracts by approval of the authorities, with any responsible person to cut and bank any quantity of logs at a given price per thousand feet, the buyer being under bonds as is customary. The authorities will appoint a reliable man to go into the woods with the loggers and prevent them taking steps to damage live trees so as to bring them under the provision of the law, and to scale the cut. No white labor is allowed except such superintendent and possibly a foreman and blacksmith where qualified men can not be found among the Indians The cost of scaling shall be borne equally by the Indian loggers and the purchaser of the logs. Ten per cent of the gross proceeds are used for the support of old, sick and helpless members of the tribe the money is to pass to the hands of the agent and by him paid to the Indians pro rata according to the amount of logs banked

A FAMOUS DINNER.

It Was In Honor of Stanley, and the Guests Got Mixed.

The following amusing though somewhat annoying incident happened in connection with the "American dinner" that was given to Henry M. Stanley on his return from the Emin Pasha relief expedition. The incident also serves to show how a very slight accident may precipitate confusion in a dinner party. The American dinner to Stanley was the idea of Mr. Henry S. Wellcome, an American business man of London, who was not only a personal friend of Stanley, but a member of the firm of druggists who fitted out the Emin Pasha relief expedition. Through Mr. Wellcome's energy almost every American in London subscribed for tickets to the dinner, and on the night it came off covers for over 300 people were laid in Evans' assembly rooms. One table on a dais was reserved for Stanley and the more distinguished guests, and there were a dozen other long tables facing this one.

Mr. Wellcome attended personally to the arrangement of the seats, and each man who had subscribed to the plate that was to be presented to the guest of the evening was given a place at the end of one of the subsidiary tables and others were given seats near each other who had expressed preference. Mr. Wellcome gave minute attention to these details, and the first thing on the morning of the night of the dinner he took his completed plan of the tables and seats to a printer in order to have the usual diagrams ready for the guidance of the diners in taking their places.

When the hour of 8:30, which had been fixed for dinner, had arrived the 300 guests were assembled in the reception room. Stanley was there, and so was Consul General John C. New, who was to preside, and so were some of the most distinguished men in England. But there were no diagrams of the dining room, and the reception committee was anxiously waiting for Mr. Wellcome to arrive with them. At 8:35 o'clock Mr. Wellcome flew in in his business clothes, with a smudge of printers' ink on his nose and more on his hands. He agonizingly informed the reception committee that the printers had pied the type for the diagrams of the tables at the last moment, and that they would be compelled to do without them.

It may seem an easy matter for 300 men to find their places at tables when their names are at their plates, but it brought about so much confusion that everybody was turned from the dining room back to the reception room, and a brilliant scheme was suggested. There was the original list of the names of the diners, with the respective places, that Mr. Wellcome had rescued from the printer, in the possession of the reception committee. The toastmaster was stationed on a chair at the door of the dining room and instructed to read the list of names, each man to pass out and take his place at the table when his name was called.

The toastmaster was a fine, big Englishman with a stentorian voice. He did as he was told. "New, Consul General John C.," he shouted, and Mr. New went through the door. "Stanley, Henry M.," bellowed the toastmaster next. There was a roar of laughter, and that scheme for seating the guests was dropped. Finally everybody went in again and searched for his place and found it or otherwise as best he might. Several of the guests designed for the principal table were rescued from inferior positions below, and some ambitious ones were degraded from the table of rank, but the dinner went on merrily and ended similarly, though it began an hour later than the time it had been set for, and all because of the accident to the diagrams.—New York Telegram.

To Wash Machinery.

A satisfactory method of removing sticky deposits of grease and dirt from parts of machinery by means of soda lye is reported as being employed to a considerable extent in England. To 1,000 parts by weight of water about 10 or 15 parts of caustic soda and 100 parts ordinary soda is the rule. This mixture is boiled, and the parts of the machinery that are to be cleaned are placed in it, this treatment having the effect of quickly loosening all grease, oil and dirt, after which the metal is thoroughly washed and dried. The action of the lye is of course to form with the grease soaps soluble in water, and to prevent the lubricating oil, etc., hardening upon the parts of the machinery when in use a third part of kerosene is added.

A Sample of the Sea.

On his return to Cordova from a visit to Mar del Plata, where he had beheld the sea for the first time, Pedro brought with him a bottle containing about an inch of sand from the shore and two inches of salt water to enable his parents, who had never seen the ocean, to form some idea of what it was like. We are informed that his parents were greatly impressed.—Saeta.

GENTLE BROWN SNAKES.

Live In Summer In Ditches and Creeks and Devour Small Fish.

It is hard for the average man or woman to believe that any species of the snake family would ever make attractive and interesting pets. So strong is our hereditary hatred of serpents that many sensitive persons even dislike to read of them or their habits. Yet it is true that the venomous and ugly kinds are in the minority and that several species are absolutely harmless and very gentle.

No better example of the latter sort need be cited than the brown snake—"De Kay's little brown snake," as it is more strictly known. While not so common a variety as the true garter snakes, which name is applied by the average individual to about five or six separate varieties, yet they may be found in their favorite haunts all through the spring, summer and part of the fall in Connecticut, New Jersey and New York.

The muddy ditches, shallow creeks and spring brooks are the chosen abiding places of the brown snakes in the early months. One of the first species to leave winter quarters, they may always be found sunning on flat stones or dry logs by the creek side in April. They are graceful in every movement and quicker than thought. When once they decide to devour a small frog or an aquatic insect it is the surest and swiftest sort of death to the victim. Imitating their larger brethren, the real water moccasins, these midgets are fast, fearless swimmers and spend much of their time in pursuing small fish. They catch a marvelous number of chubs and shiners.

When the crisp nights and dawns of September come the little brown snakes take to the uplands. In sunny, cozy corners and hollows carpeted with dry leaves they may be found sleepily basking as late as the end of October. The cooler weather seems to drive them from their damp retreats. While on the high ground they feed on tree toads, slugs and insects of many sorts. To secure one or two of these beautiful reptiles is not easy, but may be accomplished with a long handled, light net, a quick eye and a ready hand.

Kept in a roomy box with glass sides, a good sized pool and a bed of dry leaves, with some growing plants and moss, and placed where a warm, generous flood of sunlight can bathe the box and its contents nearly all day, the brown snake will be contented. He will learn to know his keeper, to take his food from the latter's fingers and will teach him many ways and habits of snakes not to be learned from books.—New York World.

Social Life of a Church.

We should understand that a wholesome social life in a church does not involve an obliteration of all that divides men and women into groups outside the church, writes Mrs. Lyman Abbott in Ladies' Home Journal. It does mean the obliteration of some of those lines. Except while under the power of an absorbing interest, degrees of intellectual cultivation, tastes, habits make companionship agreeable, or disagreeable. So while men and women of diverse characteristics may work together happily under the stress of a pressing need, may sing together the same hymns, may join in the same prayers, they may not at all agree in minor matters of daily living, and therefore constant intercourse would not be desirable.

A friendly feeling expressed in word and deed does not make it necessary that Fishin Jimmy, noble Christian though he be, should invite Mr. Gladstone to visit him nor require that Mr. Gladstone should ask Queen Victoria to invite Fishin Jimmy to one of her state dinners. Lady Aberdeen has proved to us that there is a possible fellowship in the home which transcends both intellectual and social distinctions without obliterating them. And the church should exemplify the same truth.

A Shrewd Peasant.

A countryman went to a lawyer, laid before him a case in dispute and then asked him if he would undertake to win the suit.

Lawyer—Most certainly I will undertake the case. We are sure to win.

Peasant—So you really think it is a good case?

Lawyer—Undoubtedly. I am prepared to guarantee you will get a verdict in your favor.

Peasant—Well, then, sir, I don't think I'll go to law this time, for, you see, I have just given you my opponent's case and not my own.—Fliegende Blatter.

The Jackal.

In hunter's lore there is an idea that the jackal is the lion's provider—that he locates the game and takes the lion to it. This superstition has no more foundation than is found in the fact that after a lion has slain his quarry the jackals always attend and wait the conclusion of the repast in order to pick up the leavings.

An Art Discovery.

A clever New Yorker has made a discovery that bids fair to revolutionize the world of bric-a-brac. Whether he was inspired to this by the beautiful tints and polish of the California redwood, when rightly treated, it is not known, but he has invented the art of making, from our various native woods, the most exquisite vases, jars and boxes, rivaling in their tints the famous peachblow and sang de boeuf vases, to say nothing of the more modest but not less beautiful golden glow of the Rockwood pottery.

The art is as yet in its infancy, and it may be some time before we will drink from wooden tea or coffee cups, or eat from wooden platters; but I, for one, as a housekeeper with a large invoice of chipped china, would hail the day with delight. The three pieces on exhibition comprise a rose jar from cedar wood, from which, while yet empty, one inhales the odors of "Araby the blest," and which is of an indescribable golden tone; a powder box, also of cedar, and another of elm, in ravishing shades of olive. Articles made from many different woods will soon be on the market at prices which will not discourage impecunious buyers of the beautiful.—New York Herald.

Deafness Can Not Be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

The Eccentric Kaiser.

The German emperor has one very singular peculiarity. He cannot bear to have any one look at him when he is saying his prayers in church, and in order that the courtesy of his subjects shall not disturb his religious devotions, he has issued the following unparalleled order:

"As soon as I enter church every one is on the qui vive to look at me, a thing which annoys me extremely. I therefore desire that all shall abstain from this curiosity when I go on Sunday to hear divine service. Those who desire to have a good view of me can do so every day when I take my walk in the Thiergarten or drive in my carriage."

THE DAIRY.

AFTER CHURNING.

Proper Treatment of Butter After Churning.

The treatment given to the butter after it comes in the churn is an important factor in retaining the flavor and condition until it reaches the consumer. When it is understood that it is the air that furnishes the influences that detract from the desirable taste and aroma of the butter and that it is the substances that remain in the butter that usually make it bad it is reasonably evident that the less butter is exposed to the air after churning, other things being equal, the greater purity it will have. It is largely on this account that with a large class who make a specialty of sending a first-class article of butter to market the buttermilk is washed out of the butter in the churn, the salt is put in and the butter packed in a proper condition for sending to market direct from the churn. This plan not only lessens the work and saves time, but also exposes the butter a much less time to the air, as wrapping in parchment paper as soon as it is in a proper shape makes it practically air proof. It is important that all of the vessels used with the milk, cream and butter be clean; that only pure, fresh water be used, and the washing be done until the water runs off clear. With the butter in grains the size of wheat in this way the buttermilk can all be practically washed out, and that, too, without in any way injuring the aroma or grain of the butter, and then if kept away from the air the butter will retain its flavor and freshness much longer. In this way only the working necessary to put in proper shape for sending to market is given and it is less labor to do this than to follow the old plan of attempting to work the buttermilk out and the salt in, even going to the trouble of giving a second working in order to do this. Thorough work is of course essential, but this is easily done if the right thing is done at the right time. More butter is ruined by overchurning and overworking than of doing less of this than is really needed, and more work than is needed almost invariably means more exposure to the air than is best for the keeping qualities of the butter.—N. J. Shepperd in Nebraska Farmer.

Cowy (?) Odors—Stable Taint.

A Maine subscriber of the Jersey Bulletin writes that paper as follows:

"The milk from my cows has recently been having a strong odor which one of my customers calls cowy. Do you know what it is? I am feeding ensilage and think it may be due to that."

To this Hunter Nicholson answers as follows:

"I have put a query mark after the word 'cowy' because I doubt if there is really any such thing, in the sense used. Milk, when pure, clean and warm has a peculiar odor not unlike the breath of a healthy cow, but this odor is not offensive and disappears almost entirely in straining and cooling. Good silage does not flavor milk perceptibly. The offensive odor with which K. D. C. is troubled would better be described as a stable odor, since in all probability that is where it comes from. One-half or more of the taints in milk attributed to foods come from the foul air of the stables in which the cows are kept and milked. The one reform more needed than all others among the dairies of the country is provision for clean, fresh air in cow stables.

"No stale air can be clean. To be clean it must be fresh; a constant current must be kept up, so that a constant supply of fresh air may be always at hand. In other words, ventilation. But ventilation will not avail if the surroundings of the barn and the barn itself is not kept clean. Foul air will taint milk almost instantly, and once it is tainted, it remains tainted because the taint comes from living bacteria that propogate and perpetuate themselves in the milk until they are killed by heating or sterilization."

Commenting on the above, Hoard's Dairyman says: "Mr. Nicholson's statement hits the case well and fairly concerning the source of a great deal of bad flavor in milk and consequently bad flavor in butter and cheese. There are a great number of men calling themselves dairymen who are too nasty, too lazy and too indifferent to civilized cleanliness to associate with respectable cows. More than this, they call all the talk about the value and necessity of cleanliness and care 'bosh' and 'rot.' But Mr. Nicholson is right, everlastingly right, on this point. Let us add one more thing to do connected with ventilation. Use plenty of land plaster in the gutters behind the cows and in the bedding. It should be remembered that sulphuric acid constitutes 40 per cent. of land plaster, and there is no better disinfectant than sulphuric acid. Besides the land plaster earns all its cost in holding the valuable ammonia in the manure."

The Littles in Dairying.

If a factory that makes 1,000 pounds of cheese per day could by some concentrated plan of action among its patrons and makers add about 1 cent a pound to its quality it would amount to $5 a day, or more than $750 for the summer. No small amount in itself toward paying the expenses of the concern, and leave to the patrons just so much more with which to pay taxes, pew rents and claw-hammer coats. And yet this is the experience of factories reported, who had demanded that all milk to be delivered shall, as soon as milked, be aerated and cooled before being sent. In one factory a loss of 2 cents a pound on all cheese made by inferior quality and flavor was recovered, and the cheese sold after with the best, followed the rule of every patron night and morning aerating the milk and cooling to a certain degree before placing on the factory wagon. In quite a number of factories this season where this rule is being made mandatory, there has been not only a noticeable improvement in the quality of the butter made, but an increase in amount; i. e., the milk creamed better and the churn did more perfect work. There is a place for the "coming" factory manager, and it is possible that the graduate of the dairy school with tests, scales, aerators, starters and No. 41s may raise the standard of excellence in our dairy produce factories, but the patron must also be a willing student, and work these aerators, coolers and double strainers and keep clean stables and cleaner cows, to enable this fellow to make the finer cheese and more fancy butter.—Practical Farmer.

Cooling Milk.

A fact of importance which has been emphasized is the value of cooling the milk as thoroughly as possible as soon as milked. When drawn from the cow, milk is at a high temperature, and, indeed, at just the temperature at which the majority of bacteria will grow the most rapidly. Under the influence of the atmospheric temperature, especially in the summer, the milk will become cool very slowly, but never becomes cooler than the air. The bacteria which have gotten into the milk will therefore have the very best opportunity for rapid multiplication and the milk will sour very readily. If, however, the milk is cooled to a low temperature immediately after it is drawn, the bacteria growth is checked at once, and will not begin again with much rapidity until the milk has become warmed once more. This warming will take place slowly, and, therefore, the cooled milk will remain sweet many hours longer than that which is not cooled. A practical knowledge of this fact will be of great value to every person handling milk. Early cooling to as low a temperature as is practicable is the best remedy for the too rapid souring of milk.

Prevention of Milk Fever.

The disease is one which calls for skilled advice whenever this is attainable, and one in which a fatal result may easily be produced by improper treatment. Any methods and remedies which cannot be applied with safety by the farmer himself would manifestly be out of place in this article. The directions here given, however, if carefully followed, should be the means of saving many animals which otherwise would be lost.

As a result it is found that the sooner the disease appears after calving the more likely it is to prove fatal. The suddenness and severity, or comparative mildness, of the onset, also supplies an indication as to the result. In all cases it is important that the first symptoms should be recognized, in order that treatment may be commenced early. In the case of cows which have already suffered from a previous attack, and even in cases of others which present conditions very favorable for the disease, such as already described, preventive treatment should be commenced before parturition. This consists in limiting the supply of food during the time that the cow is dry, and keeping the bowels open by one or more doses of salts. The most suitable purgative for a cow is one to one and a half pounds of Epsom or Glauber salts with an ounce of ginger and about a pint of molasses in a large quantity (two quarts or more) of tepid water.

After calving a free flow of blood to the udder should be encouraged by frequent milking, even if the calf is allowed to suck, and the animal, of course, should be protected from exposure to severe weather or to unusual cold or heat, although a certain amount of daily exercise is desirable. If the first symptoms of the disease should appear the purgative medicine should be given again at once.—Bulletin of Arkansas Experiment Station.

Tainted Milk.

It is well to notice that certain abnormal odors and tastes in milk may be produced directly by the food eaten by the cow. If a cow eats garlic or turnip the flavor of the milk is directly affected. Various other foods may, in a similar manner, affect the taste of milk, but this class of taints may be readily distinguished from those due to bacterial growth. The odors and taints due to the direct influence of the food are at their maximum as soon as the milk is drawn, never increasing afterward. But the taints due to bacterial growth do not appear at all in the fresh milk, beginning to be noticeable only after the bacteria have had a chance to grow. If, therefore, a dairyman has trouble in his milk, which appears immediately after the milking, he may look for the cause in something the cow has eaten. But if the trouble appears after a few hours, and then grows rapidly worse until it reaches a maximum, he may be assured that the remedy is to be sought not in changing the food of the cow, but in greater care in the management of the dairy or barn.—Agricultural Report.

Oleo Law in Wisconsin.

A great many people were very skeptical as to the good effect of the law passed by the Wisconsin legislature last winter against filled cheese, and forbidding the sale of oleomargarine in the yellow color of butter. A very significant fact, relative to the taking out of United States licenses in this state since the passage of the law may serve to establish judgment on that question. We learn that the applications for license have fallen off from 133 to nine. That tells the story conclusively. Without the permission to sell the stuff in the color of butter, and therefore as butter, the trade is practically worthless, thus showing beyond cavil that the business is built on deception, as its opponents have always maintained. A like effect has been observed in all the states where similar legislation has been had. The great wonder is that any man or newspaper of decent character could be found to justify it.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Mulches.

Mulches are applied in winter to assist in keeping out frost, and to prevent snow from being blown off; they are continued in spring to prevent the surface soil from alternately thawing and freezing, and by retaining the frost about the roots, prevent too early a development of buds and blossoms; but their principal use is, perhaps, to prevent a too rapid evaporation in hot weather and during drought, and thereby preserve for the use of trees, plants and vegetables the moisture that is in the soil, and to retain for a longer period than is otherwise possible such as falls from the clouds; incidentally they may, to a certain extent, prevent the growth of weeds, and thus save labor in hoeing.—Exchange.

Dairy Notes.

The oleo trade is dead and good butter is cheap.

Rye makes one of the best winter and early spring pastures.

Quick filling of the silo is proved to be by far the most satisfactory.

Minnesota is said to be the leading dairy state in the Northwest.

The cows, especially in winter, should have dry bedding to sleep on.

It is always easier to prevent diseases of the udder than to cure them.

A fattening ration is not the best thing for making a good flow of milk.

German scientists report that milk may be sterilized by means of electricity.

It is important that the cow should be given a smooth surface for lying down.

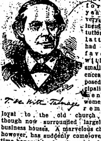
Plenty of exercise for the cows is one of the things required for profitable milk production.

The numerous fine stacks of oat straw in the country ought to be a considerable factor in the output of good butter.

Talmage in Washington.

Still Interested in New York Affairs—Seven Hundred Thousand Dollars for Charities—What He Thinks of Certain Books.

Everybody knows that the illustrious divine, who made the Brooklyn Tabernacle famous throughout the world, has recently been called to a pastorate in Washington. His church is the First Presbyterian church of that city, and while in former years a very prominent institution, it latterly had been favored with but small audiences, composed principally of men and women who remained loyal to the old church, even though now surrounded largely by business houses. A marvelous change, however, has suddenly come over this time-honored landmark, and to-day the First Presbyterian church of Washington, owing to the wondrous eloquence of its newly installed pastor, is every Sunday besieged by multitudes, many of whom stand there frequently hours in advance of the opening of the service in hopes of being able to wedge their way in somehow or other, and to listen to the matchless eloquence of America's foremost pulpit orator.



T. De Witt Talmage

People all over the country are wondering whether Dr. Talmage, in moving to the National Capital, and in exchanging his Brooklyn residence for a house in Washington, has actually divorced himself from all connection with the east. Dr. Talmage was recently interviewed on this subject by a reporter of this paper, and the reverend gentleman said that as long as his editorial chair had two legs in New York and two legs in Washington he could never be considered as having severed all his connections with the metropolis. "The Christian Herald," he said, "with its wide circulation, is a tremendous power for good," and as long as the Lord gave him health and strength he would write for that paper—in fact, he would be in his editorial chair at the Bible House more frequently now than ever. Continuing, the genial preacher said: "There is no paper in America that wields a more potential influence for good than The Christian Herald, with a circulation of nearly two hundred thousand copies weekly. Nothing but death shall separate me from it. Dr. Klopsch, its proprietor, is a man of extraordinary enterprise. This year besides printing The Christian Herald every week in beautiful colors, a veritable enchantment for the eye, he offers as a premium a complete library, consisting of ten splendid volumes, full of interest and full of entertainment, with an elegant bookcase, delivered free of all expense, together with the paper itself fifty-two times, for the moderate sum of $3. Hereafter let no home in America be without a library.

I asked Dr. Talmage whether he could recommend the library to people who contemplated securing it, and he said unhesitatingly, "I know every book. They were carefully and thoughtfully prepared, either specially written or compiled by most eminent literary men, and there is not a weakling among them."

"How are the people to secure this great library, and this wonderful paper of yours?"

"Simply by sending $3 to The Christian Herald at 888 to 895 Bible House, New York City, and by return mail they will be delighted with the result. Ever since my boyhood, I've had a passion for books; I love them still—couldn't live unless surrounded by them. So I'm something of a judge of good literature. And in my whole life I have never seen a better selection in small compass than these ten books which Dr. Klopsch has had prepared for his subscribers. It's a perfect library of information, entertainment and amusement, and is the climax of the wonderfully enterprising and far-seeing management that has placed The Christian Herald ahead of all competitors as a Christian home journal. Do you know," continued Dr. Talmage, "that this paper has in less than six years expended nearly $700,000 in various beneficences at home and abroad?"

Just then Miss Talmage came in to call her distinguished father to dinner, and the interview ended.

Remember the address, 888 to 895 Bible House, New York City.

The Afternoon Tea Table.

Now that afternoon tea is one of the functions of social life, every woman is trying to outdo every other woman in the way she arranges her tea table. The china and silver are, of course, more or less alike, but there can be many an individual and distinctive touch given by the placing of the cups on the tray, and, above all, by the lighting of the table. Electricity and gas are not to be thought of, but there is an infinite variety of the daintiest little lamps and shades to choose from.

China, glass and silver lamps are all fashionable, and the little Empire shades are singularly pretty. They are all of the one shape, of course, but are of different materials, the parchment hand-painted being the smartest. Some are embroidered with opalescent spangles on the silk, and these are very showy. Pink is the favorite color, for it casts the most becoming light.—New York Herald.

Care of Cut Glass.

Cut glass, if not properly cared for, soon loses its polish and becomes so scratched and dull as to look little better than the imitation. It should never be left to the care of untrained servants, but washed by the mistress herself. Use the suds of hot water with a little pearline, and wash with a dish-cloth made of two thicknesses of soft cheese cloth quilted. A soft brush should be used for the cuts and interstices, then rinse in clear, hot water, and, when almost dry, polish with a soft linen glass cloth. Eternal vigilance is the price of sparkling glass, as well as of liberty.

Not in It.

"That," bitterly exclaimed the microbe, as the beautiful girl, at the sound of the familiar footfall below, hastened to spray her mobile mouth with carbolized rose water, "that, I repeat, knocks me out of a good thing." Drawing his mackintosh more firmly about him, he shivered.—Detroit Tribune.

INFLUENCE OF A SONG.

It Caused Artist J. G. Brown to Emigrate to America.

After thirteen months in Edinburgh he went to London. Every young man in the United Kingdom with a particularly brainy head, and a fine plucky confidence in his ability to hew out his fortunes, drifts to London, just as in America clever young fellows from all parts of the country come to New York. There in the vast metropolis the young art student made designs for a manufacturer of stained glass windows, and also painted portraits. He was getting away from the glass factory a little, and was taking a stronger hold on art. He was perfectly willing to paint a portrait for $8 or $10. He could finish two of them in a week. One night he heard Harry Russell sing some of his emigrant songs. Russell was a concert singer of those days; he had a sympathetic voice, and sang popular songs. That settled it for young Brown. He would emigrate. He must "cross the wide blue sea." And he did. He arrived in New York on his 22d birthday, and he has been here ever since. As usual, when he made a change from one place to another, he at once sought for his art instruction in the new field. His £3 prize and his portrait-painting at $10 a portrait had not yet enabled him to sink the artisan, and be only the artist. So he got employment in a glass factory, and went to the night classes of the Academy of Design, then on the southwest corner of Broadway and Thirteenth street. Thomas S. Cummings had charge of these classes at that time.

So far young Brown's career had been very like that of the good young man in the story-books. Now, in the story-books, the good young man, as a rule, marries his employer's daughter. So that though this is always a most beautiful and delightful thing, it does not seem thrillingly novel or original on the part of the hero. Still, this is what J. G. Brown did, some years after he arrived in America. He married Miss Owens, the daughter of his employer. They went to live in Brooklyn, where Mr. Brown took a studio on Atlantic and Clinton streets. And after they had been one year married Mr. Owens died, and a year later came the panic of 1857, in which whatever property the Owens family had was lost. Mr. Brown is ever so much better able to endure these hard times to-day when he is 63 than he was then when he was 26. But he went ahead, with the grit that has always marked him, painting portraits, and about this time he began to paint children, pictures of little boys and girls, with a "story" in them. His fondness for this class of subject brought it about that after a while he was spoken of as "The Child-painter." He is still entitled to this appellation, though his "tough" little newsboys and bootblacks are almost too bold and independent to be styled children. Most of them are little men. — (John J. A'Becket, in St. Nicholas.

Ancient Laws Against Beggars.

For an able-bodied man to be caught a third time begging was held to be a crime deserving death, and the sentence was intended on fit occasions to be carried out. The poor man might not change his master at will, or wander from place to place. He might not keep his children at home unless he could answer for their time. If out of employment, preferring to be idle, he might be demanded for work by any master of the craft to which he belonged and compelled to work whether he would or no. If caught begging once, being neither aged nor infirm, he was whipped at the cart's tail. If caught a second time, his ear was slit, or bored through with a hot iron. If caught a third time, being thereby proved to be of no use upon this earth, but to live upon it only to his own hurt, and to that of others, he suffered death as a felon. So the law of England remained for sixty years. First enacted by Henry VIII., it continued unrepealed through the reigns of Edward and Mary, subsisting, therefore, with the deliberate approval of both the great parties between whom the country was divided. Reconsidered under Elizabeth, the same law was again formally passed; and it was, therefore, the expressed conviction of the English nation that it was better for a man not to live at all than to live a profitless and worthless life.

"Ain't a dollar pretty high for a meal like that?" asked the tourist. "I don't mind ownin' up that it is," said the landlord of the Cowboys' Rest, "but them meals cost me 75 cents apiece." "But I happen to know that you sell a tenmeal ticket for $5." "Yes, I know I do, but about half the fellers that buys them tickets gits killed before they have et two meals."—Indianapolis Journal.

"There is some excuse," said the police judge, "for a man becoming exasperated by the strains of a hand organ, but to rush out and attack the musician with an ax is carrying things with a little too high a hand." "I know it is, jedge," pleaded the man who had never been in a police court before, "but when a blame dog comes along jist after a man has had an argument with his wife about whether he gits an overcoat or her a cloak, and begins playin' 'Home, Sweet Home,' it is more than flesh an' blood kin' stand!"—Indianapolis Journal.

Love labor, for, if thou dost not want it for food, thou mayst for physic.

Don't Snub.

No matter how much you may feel your own importance or how thoroughly you know and appreciate the good blood that you can boast, it is unnecessary cruelty and is really an indication of bad form to snub some one whom you look upon as your inferior. We never can tell in this world when we may need somebody else, we never know when the most despised will be the most desirable. Therefore, the all-pervading desire to look out for number one should prompt us to be kind and considerate even though our nature, that proud, selfish part of us, prompt us to do otherwise.

There are some people in this world whom we cannot do other than despise. We never can like them, their company is an affliction and a bore that we would, oh, so gladly, be rid of, yet do not snub them. Smother the feeling of contempt, bury deep in your heart that sentiment of infinite superiority that makes you long to cut them so hopelessly that they will never think of stepping over the barriers again.

It is better policy not to give way to this feeling, much better to bite the lip and vulgarly grin and bear it than to do that which is absolutely certain to recoil upon you in the after time. If you cannot be effusive, be neutral in your sentiments. Hypocrisy, perhaps, is not the sort of thing one ought to boom, but tact is, a sweet, amiable tact that knows better than to show any of the Pharisaical "better than thou" side to the disposition. Beware of snubbing—take the advice of one who knows, and as you value your future peace of mind and your present social success, do not be led into a practice that is wholly dangerous and leaves a very unpleasant memory in its wake.—Philadelphia Times.

DIPHTHERIA.

Swift, But Fatal in its Action Unless Properly Treated.

Nine out of ten cases can be saved with proper care. This is a disease caused by microbes; they grow and increase in the terrible lesions of the throat; from there they are taken up by the blood, in this way they contaminate the entire system, and the patient dies thoroughly poisoned.

Use Kickapoo Indian Sagwa for this trouble. It purifies the blood; it acts direct on the stomach, liver and kidneys; it expels all poisonous secretions by the natural channels of the body, and enables the great vital organs to perform their natural functions; it carries the patient over the critical point of the disease; convalescence and health attend its use. Purely vegetable; efficient always; harmful never. All druggists sell it. $1.00 a bottle; 6 bottles for $5.00.

Electric Suspension Railroad.

Among the technical novelties introduced in Germany, the new electric suspension railroad between Leipsic and Halle deserves mention. The system is a recent invention of Eugene Laugen of Cologne, and its distinctive feature is the suspension of the cars. The only place where the new system has so far been tested for a short time is on the special line between Cologne and Deutz, a suburb, but there it has been found eminently successful. By the new system the running time between Leipsic and Halle, twenty-two miles, is to be reduced from thirty-five minutes, as at present, to fifteen or twenty minutes. The Berlin municipal authorities are very anxious to see this new line in operation, as in the event of all the promises made being carried out, it is the intention to build several electric suspension roads for intramural traffic at Berlin.

Scouring Wool With Naphtha.

In the latest methods of scouring wool naphtha is employed as the cleansing substance. By forcing the naphtha through the wool, which is done by means of a pump, all the natural oil is extracted. It is claimed that the naphtha does not injure the fiber, as alkali cleansing does, but leaves the fleece in better condition than when cleaned by any other process. A further valuable feature of the new method is that after the grease is extracted from the wool it may again be extracted from the naphtha in a pure state and can be used as a medicinal agent or as a saponificator in the purest of soaps. It is stated that a plant which used this method for the scouring of 500,000 pounds of wool saved 80,000 pounds in pure wool oil.

The First Lesson of an Arab Boy.

The very first lesson which an Arab baby learns when he begins to talk is to keep facts to himself. It does not sound very friendly, put in that way, but it saves a deal of trouble. Foreigners do not understand Arabs. They ask them pointed questions and receive peculiar answers. They construe the answers to please themselves, and come away to tell the world that the Arabs are a nation of liars. They are not a nation of liars. Perhaps if they should tell the foreigners to mind their own affairs and let them and theirs alone the foreigners would understand them better.—"Yamoud," by Henry Willard French, in St. Nicholas.

Confinement and Hard Work

Indoors, particularly in the sitting posture, are far more prejudicial to health than excessive muscular exertion in the open air. Hard sedentary workers are far too weary after office hours to take much needful exercise in the open air. They often need a tonic. Where can they seek invigoration more certainly and thoroughly than from Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a renovant particularly adapted to recruit the exhausted force of nature. Use also for dyspepsia, kidney, liver and rheumatic ailments.

"Snail's Pace."

What is a snail's pace? Some Florentine experts in snailology, finding time hanging heavily on their hands, conceived the idea of accurately calculating the traveling speed of snails, and, with this end in view, it was decided to make a series of more or less elaborate experiments. Half a dozen of the moluscs were permitted to crawl between two points ten feet apart. Exact time was kept from the start to the finish, and thus the average "pace" was ascertained. The experimenters reduced their figures into tables of feet, and thus found that it would take a snail exactly fourteen days to travel a mile.—Glasgow Weekly Mail.

BY THE PRESIDENT.

DIGEST OF CLEVELAND'S MESSAGE TO CONGRESS.

The Greater Part of the Message Is Given Over to a Discussion of Our Foreign Affairs and the National Finances—The Work of the Government Reviewed and Recommendations Made.

The message opens with a reference to the importance of our foreign relations and the exigencies of the national finances at this time, and the consequent determination of the president to confine his message to those subjects.

The first subject of importance touched upon is the disordered condition of affairs in China, following upon the close of the war with Japan, the consequent weakening of the central authority of the government and the serious outbreaks of the old fanatical spirit against foreigners is discussed. The demands of the United States and other powers for the punishment of the aggressors and the compliance of the Chinese government are related, as is the demand of the United States for a special commission to investigate the disturbances where they first broke out.

"The energetic steps we have thus taken," says the president, "are all the more likely to result in future safety to our citizens in China, because the imperial government is, I am persuaded, entirely convinced that we desire only the liberty and protection of our own citizens and redress for any wrongs that may have been suffered and that we have no ulterior designs or objects, political, or otherwise."

Of the Waller incident, the message says:

"The customary cordial relations between this country and France have been undisturbed with the exception that a full explanation of the treatment of John L. Waller, by the expeditionary military authorities of France still remains to be given."

"The official record of the trial has been furnished this government," says the message, "but the evidence adduced in support of the charges—which was not received by the French minister for foreign affairs till the first week in October—has thus far been withheld, the French government taking the ground that its production in response to our demand would establish a bad precedent. The efforts of our ambassador to procure it, however, though impeded by recent changes in the French ministry, have not been relaxed, and it is confidently expected that some satisfactory solution of the matter will shortly be reached. Meanwhile it appears that Mr. Waller's confinement has every alleviation which the state of his health and all the other circumstances of the case demand or permit."

The president points out as a pleasant contrast the conclusion of a permanent treaty of arbitration between the two countries and recommends the acceptance of the invitation to take part in the Paris exposition of 1900.

"Our relations with Germany," he says, "are influenced by the delusive doctrine that internal development of a nation is promoted and its wealth increased by a policy which is undertaking to reserve its home markets for the exclusive use of its own producers, necessarily obstructs their sales in foreign markets and prevents free access to the products of the world; the desire to retain trade in timeworn ruts, regardless of the inexorable laws of new needs and changed conditions of demand and supply and our own halting tardiness to inviting a freer exchange of commodities and by this means imperilling our footing in the external markets naturally open to us, have created a situation somewhat injurious to American export interests, not only in Germany, where they are perhaps most noticeable, but in adjacent countries."

The effect of this particularly on food products and also on our insurance companies is pointed out. The necessity for openhanded fairness in dealing with other nations is stated, but it is argued that if necessary to provide restrictions similar to those from which we suffer, in order to guard against unfair discrimination, the way to such a course is easy, but should not be lightly entered upon.

The Bering Sea Question.

The vexatious points of the Bering sea question are referred to and the failure of the arbitration tribunal to provide a means of settlement are pointed out. The insufficiency of the British patrol of Bering sea, and the necessity for a more effective enforcement of regulations have, it is said, been pointed out to the British government. If it is hoped to save the seal from extinction. Of the proposal to pay $425,000 to Great Britain, in settlement of British claims for damages, which was refused by the last congress, the president recommends that it can be again considered and sanctioned. If this is refused, we are bound by every consideration of honor and good faith, he says, to provide for a speedy settlement by arbitration. A treaty of arbitration is, accordingly, to be laid before the senate. An appropriation for the completion of the Alaska boundary survey which follows the contour of the coast is earnestly recommended. The importance of an international agreement as to the line of the 141st meridian, which forms the rest of the boundary, is dwelt upon. Attention is also called to the unsatisfactory condition of the boundary with Canada in the great lakes, and the necessity for a joint commission on the subject.

Of Venezuela, the message simply states that a statement of the interest and policy of the United States regarding the boundary dispute was sent to Great Britain in July last.

"The general conclusions therein reached and formulated," says the president, "are in substance that the traditional established policy of the government is firmly opposed to a forcible increase by any European power of its territorial possessions on this continent; that this policy is as well founded in principle as it is strongly supported by numerous precedents; that as a consequence, the United States is bound to protest against the enlargement of the area of British Guiana, in derogation of the rights and against the will of Venezuela; that considering the disparity in strength of Great Britain and Venezuela, the territorial dispute between them can be reasonably settled only by friendly and impartial arbitration and that the resort to such arbitration should include the whole controversy, and is not satisfied if one of the powers concerned is permitted to draw an arbitrary line through the territory in debate, and declare that it will submit to arbitration only the portion lying on one side of it. In view of these conclusions, the dispatch in question called upon the British government for a definite answer to the question whether it would or would not submit the territorial controversy between itself and Venezuela in its entirety to impartial arbitration. The answer of the British government has not yet been received, but it is expected shortly, when further communication on the subject will probably be made to the congress."

Hawaii is dismissed with a reference to the uprising last January, the demands made upon the Hawaiian government for the rights of American citizens concerned therein, and the demand for the recall of Minister Thurston.

The padrone system is denounced as responsible for such manifestations against helpless aliens as the lynching of Italians in Colorado. Congratulations are offered on our good relations with Japan, in view of her vast gains in greatness. Unimportant references are made to our relations with Mexico, Nicaragua and Russia. The recommendation for an abandonment of the Samoan government is renewed.

The Cuban Insurrection.

Of Cuba, the president says, the United States must preserve international faith, whatever the sympathy of our citizens with the insurgents. He continues:

"Though neither the warmth of our people's sympathy with the Cuban insurgents, nor our loss or material damage consequent upon the futile endeavors thus far made to restore peace and order, nor any shock our humane sensibilities may have received from the cruelties which appear to characterize this sanguinary and fiercely conducted war, have in the least shaken the determination of the government to honestly fulfil every international obligation, yet it is to be earnestly hoped on every ground that the devastation of armed conflict may speedily be stayed and order and quiet restored to the distracted island, bringing in their train the activity and thrift of peaceful pursuits."

The Alliance incident and Spain's disavowal of it and assurance of a non-recurrence of similar interference, are stated.

The president then expresses his regret that the Turkish government should have thwarted the purpose to send to the disturbed quarter of the empire the United States consul at Sivas, in order to investigate and report. Every effort, he says, is put forth to insure the safety of American citizens, and the United States minister is alert, but, he goes on, several of the most powerful European powers have assumed a duty as agents of the Christian world in Turkey to restrain fanatical brutality, and "it is earnestly hoped that prompt and effective action on their part will not be delayed."

The message recommends at length an improvement in the consular service, by some plan of appointment and control.

Fully half the message is devoted to a discussion of the financial situation.

"By command of the people," the message says, "a customs revenue system designed for the protection and benefit of favored classes at the expense of the great mass of our countrymen, and which, while inefficient for the purpose of revenue, curtailed our trade relations and impeded our entrance to the markets of the world, has been superseded by the tariff policy which in principle is based upon a denial of the right of the government to obstruct the avenues of our people's cheap living or lessen their comfort and contentment, for the sake of according especial advantages to favorites, and while encouraging, our intercourse and trade with other nations, recognizes the fact that American self-reliance, thrift and ingenuity can build up our country's industry and develop its resources more surely than enervating paternalism."

But this and the repeal of the silver purchase law, it is said, falls far short of curing the financial evils from which we suffer.

The Currency Question.

A lengthy review follows of the growth of our currency, especially the United States notes and treasury notes and the consequent endless drain on the gold reserve of the treasury.

The president states that "among the causes for this constant and uniform shrinkage in this fund, may be attributed the great falling off in exports under the operation of the tariff law, until recently in force, which crippled our exchange of commodities with foreign nations and necessitated to some extent the payment of our balances in gold. The unnatural infusion of silver into our currency and the increasing agitation for its free and unlimited coinage, which have created apprehension as to our disposition or ability to continue gold payments; the consequent hoarding of gold at home and the stoppage of investments of foreign capital; as well as the return of our securities already sold abroad; and the high rate of foreign exchange which induced the shipment of our gold to be drawn against as a matter of speculation."

The "history of the various bond transactions which have been resorted to in order to replenish the gold reserve, is reviewed and the constant subsequent falling off pointed out. Of the last transaction with the syndicate, the president says:

"The performance of this contract not only restored the reserve, but checked for a time the withdrawals of gold and brought on a period of restored confidence, and such peace and quiet in business circles as were of the greatest possible value to every interest that affect our people. I have never had the slightest misgiving concerning the wisdom or propriety of this arrangement, and am quite willing to answer for my share of responsibility for its promotion. I believe it averted a disaster, the imminence of which was fortunately not at the time generally understood by our people."

We are now, the president says, nearly where we started, and nearly all of the gold withdrawn has been paid out on United States notes, which still remain uncancelled. Therefore, he says, "I am convinced the only thorough and practicable remedy for our troubles is found in the retirement and cancellation of our United States notes, commonly called greenbacks, and the outstanding treasury notes issued by the government in payment of silver purchases, under the act of 1890."

The method he proposes is to exchange for bonds, small and large, and bearing a low rate of interest, and for a long term.

The increase in the bonded debt would be compensated by renewed activity and enterprise and restored confidence. A troublesome indebtedness would be cancelled instead of the menace of unending bonds.

"The obligations necessary to fund this indebtedness would not equal in amount those which we have been relieved since 1884 by anticipation and payment beyond the requirements of the sinking fund out of our surplus revenues.

"The currency withdrawn by the retirement of the United States notes and treasury notes, amounting to probably less than $480,000,000 might be supplied by such gold as would be used on their retirement, or by an increase in the circulation of our national banks. * * * I think they should be allowed to issue circulation equal to the par value of the bonds they deposit to secure, and that the tax on their circulation should be reduced to one-fourth of one per cent, which would undoubtedly meet all the expense of the government incurred on their account. In addition, they should be allowed to substitute or deposit in lieu of the bonds now required as security for their circulation, those which would be issued for the purpose of retiring the United States notes and treasury notes."

It is estimated that this would increase the national bank circulation by nearly as much as the currency retired. Restrictions in the law on the location of national banks, the president says, might be done away with, and branch banks authorized.

But there might not be the necessity for such an addition to the currency by new issues of bank circulation, as at first glance is indicated, he says.

Silver for Fractional Coin.

The silver left in the treasury, he thinks, might be gradually converted into fractional coin.

The government, he says, receives no gold in payment of revenues, nor would it if the revenues were increased. The receipts are all in silver certificates, United States notes and treasury notes. A lengthy argument follows on the impossibility of securing gold for the treasury from the present currency receipts. The withdrawals of gold, he says, are due to fright, and nothing will stop them but a cure of the fright. It is denied that bonds have been issued to supply insufficient revenue. The president then takes up the free silver coinage question, and says:

"Were there infinitely stronger reasons than can be adduced for hoping that such action would secure for us a bimetallic currency moving on lines of parity, an experiment so novel and hazardous as that proposed might well stagger those who believe that that stability is an imperative condition of sound money.

"No government, no human contrivance, or act of legislation has ever been able to hold the two metals together in free coinage, at a ratio appreciably different from that which is established in the markets of the world."

A lengthy argument against the theory of the government's power to maintain the value of silver follows, on well known lines and the value of a safe and stable currency is enlarged upon in general terms. The message closes as follows:

"I have ventured to express myself on this subject with earnestness and plainness of speech, because I cannot rid myself of the belief that there lurks in the proposition for the free coinage of silver, so strongly approved and so enthusiastically advocated by a multitude of my countrymen, a serious menace to our prosperity and an insiduous temptation of our people to wander from the allegiance they owe to public and private integrity. It is because I do not distrust the good faith and sincerity of those who press this scheme that I have imperfectly, but with zeal, submitted my thoughts upon this momentous subject. I cannot refrain from begging them to reexamine their views and beliefs in the light of patriotic reason and familiar experience and to weigh again and again the consequences of such legislation as their efforts have invited. Even the continued agitation of the subject adds greatly to the difficulties of a dangerous financial situation already forced upon us.

"In conclusion, I especially entreat the people's representatives in the congress, who are charged with the responsibility of inaugurating measures for the safety and prosperity of our common country, to promptly and effectively consider the ills of our critical financial plight. I have suggested a remedy which my judgment approves. I desire, however, to assure the congress that I am prepared to co-operate with them in perfecting any other measure promising thorough and practical relief and that I will gladly labor with them in every patriotic endeavor to further the interests and guard the welfare of our countrymen whom in our respective places of duty we have undertaken to serve.

SARAH BERNHARDT'S PETS.

When She Presents Them to the Paris "Zoo" She Parts With Them Forever.

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt has a convenient way of disposing of her animal pets. When she is tired of her tigers, lions, vipers and apes she makes a handsome present of them to the "Museum," which is the official name for the Paris Zoo. Just before she left for Bordeaux a fortnight ago Madam sent her Paul and Virginia, whose family name is orang-outang, to that haven of rest, with the injuction that they must be very well cared for. Rumor at once had it that Madam had insisted upon her pets being fed daily on beefsteak, but the Museum authorities repudiated the statement, and declared that the apes are fed only on dates, figs, graps, biscuits and bananas. A bowl of hot milk is occasionally added to this diet, but the apes are out-and-out vegetarians.

It is a curious fact that, though Mme. Sarah Bernhardt has sent pets by the score to the Museum, she never visits them after they have been lodged there. Once she has made up her mind to part with one of her pets, to all of which she is most devoted while they are in her possession, she never sees the animal again. The leave-taking is gone through in private, and the creature departs to its new home and sees its former mistress no more. Occasionally a wild beast presented by Madame has given a good deal of trouble, through its ferocity, at its new home, but somehow Mme. Bernhardt herself never has any difficulty with them. She believes that by the law of great kindness, and firmness just as great, any animal can be subdued; and hitherto her lions, tigers, apes, etc., have confirmed that principle, for she has never yet come to grief through them, though she treats them in the same way as ordinary mortals treat their pet dogs and cats.

HOT DAY IN CALIFORNIA.

When Cartridges Exploded Spontaneously and the Sun Melted Bullets.

"We were up in Marin county camping out, and went for a little brook trout sport one afternoon," said Al Gerberding to a San Francisco Call reporter. "It got so warm that we could stand it no longer, and we concluded to take a swim. We hung our clothes up on a tree and made for the brook. There was so much genuine pleasure in the cool water that we stayed in very nearly an hour. When we got out the sun had veered around and was shining on our clothing. Berg got his apparel and was just about half dressed, when I called to him to bring me his pistol, which was hanging on a limb. He started for it, and just as he was about to take it down there was a racket loud enough to raise the dead, and the cartridges in the belt began to explode. Berg executed a few acrobatic movements, and was half a mile down the canon in about two minutes. The cartridges continued to explode until they were all gone. Forty-eight shots were fired in less than half a minute. I counted them myself. Whew! It wasn't such a day as this, though. By Jove, isn't it hot?"

"Say, Al, what made those cartridges go off?" inquired a stranger.

"The heat. Some of them failed to explode, but in such cases the slugs melted and ran out of the copper shells. Berg barely escaped with his life, and if he had had his hat on when the shooting occurred it would have been shot full of holes. Whew! Let's go and have a long lemonade."

"Whew-w-w," responded the listeners in chorus. "We'll go you one if we lose."

Boom in Marriage.

The new civil marriage law has given an immense impetus to the celebration of that ceremony in Hungary, according to a correspondent of a London newspaper. The fact that it will soon be in force acts as an inducement, both to those who detest it and to those who welcome it, to get married as quickly as possible. The peasants, who have been taught to regard it as ungodly, are making all haste to be joined together under the old law; and those who have been unable to wed under the old, because of religious differences, hail the advent of the new as a special providence to make the way of true love run smooth. The inducements to marry under the new law are heightened by the promise of civic recognition. The first couples united will be entertained at banquets and serenaded by those who regard the new rule with favor.

WILL SOON HANG

HARRY HAYWARD WILL BE EXECUTED WEDNESDAY MORNING.

Some Time Between Midnight and Sunrise the Murderer of Catherine Ging Will Pay the Penalty for His Crime — Hayward Says That He Is Sorry That the Execution Is Delayed So Long—Talk With Gov. Clough.

Minneapolis, Dec. 10. — Harry T. Hayward, the murderer of Catherine Ging, has but a few hours more to live. Gov. Clough has signed the death warrant and Hayward will be hanged between midnight and sunrise Wednesday morning.

The death warrant is a purely formal affair, but is remarkable, because, in all the history of the United States there is none just like it. Never before has the governor of this state named other than a Friday as the day of execution. Gov. Clough says he sees no reason why he should follow this precedent. One day will do as well as another, he says, and by setting the day for the execution as soon as possible after issuing the death warrant, Gov. Clough believes that the best interests of the community will be served.

The governor had a severe trial in the morning before he issued the warrant. He went to St. Paul on the 9:30 o'clock interurban car, and as fellow passengers he had the aged father and mother of Hayward. He knew, then, that they were on a mission that could not prove successful. They entered the capitol building immediately behind the governor, and, despite the fact that he had given orders to allow no one to see him before the warrant was issued, he felt that he could not refuse the plea of the parents and granted them an audience.

A Trying Ordeal.

"Never before," Gov. Clough informed a reporter, "did I pass through such a trying ordeal as during the hour I was closeted with the parents of that young man whose death warrant I knew I must sign a few hours later. I have never felt so sorry for a father and mother as I did for them. They pleaded for the life of their boy as only a father and mother could. They offered no reason why I should not carry out the letter of the law, simply asking me to waive the death warrant. They were both hysterical and their pleading would have softened the hardest heart. No man could feel more sympathy than I felt for them, and it was the hardest task ever set for me to perform when I had to tell them once for all that the law must be obeyed. It was peculiarly an unpleasant task from the long acquaintance with the family which I have enjoyed, especially with the elder Hayward, with whom I have had intimate business relations, and have always found an honorable, Christian gentleman, honest and upright in all his business dealings. But I am here to perform the duties of my office and shall do so regardless of consequences. The law had condemned Harry Hayward to death and I have carried out the spirit of the law, although its final consummation will grieve me more than I can tell."

"What was your object in naming Wednesday instead of Friday, as the day of execution?"

"My only object in fixing a date for the execution of Hayward was to best serve the interests of the public and all concerned. I decided that this could be done by naming as early a date as possible, and so fixed upon Wednesday. There is no law requiring Friday to be selected as the day of execution, although it has been customary to do so."

A Revengeful Spirit.

"That's a damned long time to wait for a railroad train," was the statement, made quite philosophically, with which Harry Hayward received the news that he would be hanged Wednesday morning. Sheriff Holmberg and Jailor West were at his cell door, and the sheriff had said: "Harry, I am here to tell you that the governor has signed your death warrant, and you will have to hang Wednesday morning. It may be a long time to wait in a station," said the sheriff, "but it is short shrift for a man who is to give up his life, and you had better prepare for the end."

"I don't care for that," was the reply. "I have been making ready for this all the time, and it is not such a great surprise. I wish it had been weeks ago. I suppose I can make a statement, however, can't I?"

"You can say just what you want," said the sheriff, "and I promise that it will be given the papers just as you say it."

"That's what I want," said he, with a look of satisfaction.

Jailer West then seated himself near the cage, and with a pad of paper and pencil wrote every word down as the prisoner spoke it. The statement is as follows:

"It's a short time, but it's just as well. I am just as ready as I shall be. I would rather be hung than go to Stillwater for life. If the governor would come over here and talk with me I should tell him the same thing. I have had a good time here and am going to have a good time yet. I have got no kick coming. They ought to go back to the old times. Everybody is too soft-hearted now. I tell you, Mike Kierce is smart, but that brother of mine, Adry—if I had him here I would pull his eyes out and cut his heart out, and then I would like to have Blixt here and make him look on. After I had them all cut up I would then sew them up and throw them away to the dogs."

Hayward then began a tirade against Mike Kierce and an ex-prisoner whom he had paid money to assist him to escape, and who had given away the plot.

Becomes Docile.

Hayward was changed to another cell. He was taken from the one occupied by him since the frustration of his attempt at breaking jail and given another immediately adjoining. It is No. 3 on the second tier. Before being removed he was again treated to a bath. This luxury has been denied him for some time past, in fact prior to the refusal of the supreme court to grant a new trial. The work was done under the supervision of the deputies. He was in excellent spirits apparently, and talked, laughed and joked incessantly. He was as docile as a lamb in his obedience to the orders, and was heard to express pleasure at his physical condition at the conclusion of the bath.

But under the guise of the humorous was detected a palpable insincerity. The launching of his soul into eternity he viewed with the most conceivable equanimity. He would "die game at all hazards, and not exhibit the slightest signs of fear," but there was present the regret that he was unable to retaliate on his brother for the part the latter played in the conviction of the murderer. "I would be pleased to have the trap sprung this minute," said he, while splashing around in the water like a great overgrown child; "if I could only get even with Adry. Oh, if I only had him with me for a few minutes what fun there would be. If I could cut him open, reach in and tear his heart out, hold it up to you all, and show you how black it is I would be contented."

For a Brief Period.

After being conducted to his cell he was informed by the sheriff that, beginning this morning, and until the day of his death, he would be allowed anything to eat which he wished. The announcement of the leniency of the sheriff greatly pleased the prisoner, and he was particularly profuse in his thanks. For his breakfast this morning he ordered lobster and chocolate "so thick that the spoon will stand in the cup." He said the bread he had been eating was quite good enough, and he did not wish any change in that direction. Deputy Bright was entrusted with his order and told by the sheriff to procure the things that were wanted. Henceforth, until his execution, his epicurean tastes will be gratified.

From this time on the work will progress rapidly for the execution. It will consist chiefly of selecting the proper deputies to have charge of the various portions of the affair and by the time Tuesday night has arrived every essential feature will be prepared, so that there will be no hitch in the arrangements. The hanging will take place between 4:30 o'clock and 5 on Wednesday morning, and the early part of the evening will be used in the erection of the scaffold in the death chamber. This will be ready before the hour arrives, and in fact the chamber is already locked and the materials are ready for use. Two ropes, one a half-inch and the other a three-eighths-inch piece, were purchased long ago in Chicago, and the larger piece will be used for the occasion, if it stands a satisfactory test.

Cursed His Brother.

"May the curse of God fall on you and yours, and allow me from the minute I drop from the scaffold to haunt you day and night until your death. Then I will welcome you on the brink of —— with a red-hot iron."

These are the farewell words of Harry Hayward to his brother Adry yesterday afternoon. He hurled them at the latter as he descended the stairs leading to the tier in which the prisoner was confined and passed through the iron doorway to the outer office. It was their last meeting on earth, and such the murderer intends it to be. Adry was as calm as the prisoner was impassioned. He was unmoved by the anethemas except toward pity. His was the brotherly affection, and interrupting the curses of the insane man he breathed a fervant "God bless you. Good by Harry," which elicited the remark quoted above.

Hayward's parents visited him earlier in the day, and there was a tearful scene. They made Harry promise that he would send for Adry and extend the forgiving hand, but as soon as Adry appeared then Harry began to curse him.

The murderer sprang to his feet, and with a dramatic effect said:—

"You low-down, mean, contemptible, miserable wretch. You refuse to do what I ask you after what I have done for you? You, you God-forsaken cur! Would you thwart my designs? You cowardly tool, you have played a good part, but now I can tell you what I think of you. My letter to you was only a decoy for the purpose of getting you here. You villain, you are a disgrace to your parents, and worse than the bums of the street. If I could only get at you I would dig out your brains with a knife and tear out your heart with this hand. I would grind them up, crush the pieces, squeeze out the juice, make it into a pie and thrust it down your throat."

The interview ended as given above. It is believed that Hayward will break down at the last and it will be necessary to carry him to the gallows. He yesterday declined to see a clergyman, but toward midnight he showed signs of weakening and Dr. Purtan remained with him all night.

Sensation Exploded.

Cincinnati, Dec. 10.—The banks here have exploded the sensation about S. T. Lewis, the bond forger, getting over $200,000 from this city, leaving forged bonds as collateral. They find that Lewis got only $25,000 from Cincinnati, $5,000 from W. E. Hutton, a broker, and $20,000 from the German National bank. It is believed that the banks at Dayton and elsewhere have joined in hiring Detective Crawford to pursue Lewis abroad.

Turned Out.

Washington, Dec. 10. — Postmaster General Wilson has dismissed William E. Hill of Mississippi, assistant superintendent of the free delivery department; Samuel Bight of Indiana, clerk in the free delivery bureau, and William A. Sullivan of Boston, another clerk, now of the dead letter office, but formerly of the free delivery bureau, for giving out official information and conspiracy to belittle the department.

The Agricultural Timber and Fuel Convention which convenes at Crookston tomorrow promises to be an important affair. Prominent men from all over the Northern part of the state and from North Dakota have promised to attend. It is high time a meeting of his kind was held for if the reservation is not opened the coming year, we will soon have another crew of estimator and surveyors who will do the work all over again as soon as the new administration comes in. It is high time we get to work if any of the pine is to be saved and the Crookston Convention should express itself in no uncertain way.

The wheat blockade has been on in full force the past week and all of the elevators have been full most of the time. It looks a trifle as if St, Hilaire was getting the worst of it in the matter of obtaining cars. On Monday each of the buyers here received one car which were filled before three o'clock, while at Wylie with only one firm buying ten cars were received. Very little effort seems to be made by the company to get cars here and we are of the opinion that the people here have not kicked as hard as other localities so do not get what they deserve. At the present rate of getting cars it will be May 1st before our wheat is market ed.

MY MOTHER.

Some one I love comes back to me
With every gentle face I see.
Beneath each wave of soft gray hair
I seem to see my mother there.
With every kindly glance and word
It seems as if I must have heard
Her speak and felt her tender gaze
With all the love of olden days.
And I am moved to take her hand
And tell her now I understand
How tired she grew beneath the strain
Of feeling every loved one's pain.
No further burdens could she bear.
The promise of that land more fair
Alone could tempt her from her child.
And now if I could keep her here
No sacrifice could be too dear,
No tempered winds for her too mild.

Then I would smooth and kiss her face
And by her side take my old place
And sob my years and cares away.
The tears I have so long repressed
Would lose their ache upon her breast.
I think if I could feel her touch
Once more it would not matter much
How sunny or how dark the day.

I love each mother that I see
That brings my own so near to me,
For though I nevermore may frame
Upon my lips that hallowed name
To any who will draw me near
And answer me with warm caress
As long as there are mothers here
No child can be quite motherless.

Great London.

London is perhaps the most eccentric wonder in the history of the world. Its vast extent of sordid, inartistic buildings and its enormous migratory lodger population, its abundant evidence of wealth and yet its widespread areas of local poverty, its feeble minded native occupants and the energy of its foreign and provincial immigrants, the sumptuousness of its western mansions and its unlimited extent of squalid homes, its ill arranged, ill kept and dirty streets and its polluted atmosphere are all exceptional, and most of them are in their various ways superlative. Moreover, London, all its gifts considered, is perhaps the least efficient and least influential aggregate of people on the globe.

A population so enormous and condensed is, from sheer incapacity of apprehension, led to take the facts of its condition absolutely and without comparison and to suppose that in its special sphere the actual condition is at once natural and necessary. London so completely fills the eye of Londoners that they become incapable of measuring the great community or of estimating its condition and its worth by any outer standard. Hence it is that the chief city in the world falls frequently behind those less important places which are not completely overwhelmed by their own greatness. Petty capitals and large provincial towns compare themselves with one another, to their mutual benefit. They thus acquire self conscious modesty and are not left to the assumption that in their respective areas and communities whatever is or is determined must be natural and right.—Quarterly Review.

He Stacked.

A traveling man just home from a far western trip has brought with him something new in linguistic novelties. "I was eating dinner in a restaurant way out west," he said, "and as I finished the bustling waiter girl scorched up to me and asked in a fast express sort of tone, 'Do you want any dessert?' 'Yes, I will take some,' I answered. 'Well, then, stack!' she demanded in an imperative tone. 'Stack!' I repeated, thinking it was something new to eat. 'What's that?' 'Why, pile your dinner dishes up,' she impatiently explained. So I 'stacked' all the little dishes on my plate, and she scorched off with them and brought me three kinds of pie, two kinds of pudding and some frozen custard."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

George Eliot and a Tragedy.

The late George Eliot, though she possessed none of the ordinary feminine attractions, had a commanding magnetism for some men. There is an indictment surviving against her in a village not 100 miles from Chester of having set herself to win the affections of a young man who was the lover of the pretty daughter of the squire or vicar, I forget which. She succeeded, and the girl threw herself out of the window, and only the note of triumph, not the note of pity, touched the great novelist.—London Queen.

Abstracts, abridgments, summaries, etc., have the same use with burning glasses—to collect the diffused rays of wit and learning in authors and make them point with warmth and quickness upon the reader's imagination.—Swift.

Town originally signified a farm or farmhouse. It is used in Wycliff in this sense: "And they went their ways, one to his town, another to his merchandise."

We must conform to a certain extent to the conventionalities of society, for they are the ripened results of a varied and long experience. —A. A. Hodge.

In Paris the demand for small dogs is met by rearing pups from an alcoholic diet, which retards their growth.

In Switzerland a society has long been formed for the preservation of wild flowers.

ABOUT HAIR RESTORERS.

The Story of the Man From the West Was Not Appreciated.

"Speaking of hair restorers," said the western member, glancing at the bald headed man, "puts me in mind of a time when I would have been willing to give a couple of years of my life for something of that kind—when I was snowbound in the Sierras."

"Hold on! Is it that old story again? I think I will have to go." And the gentleman with the 1 1-2 inch cigar stub between his teeth walked out ostentatiously.

"In the winter of 1879 I was with a party of prospectors in the Sierras," continued the man with a story for the benefit of those who remained. "There were three of us—an English professor, a Harvard graduate and myself. Snow began to fall soon after we got into the foothills, and we stopped at a log shanty built by some one who had been there before us. As we had provisions for two weeks we were not alarmed when it became apparent that we were snowbound, but at the end of that time the situation took on another aspect. We shot a deer after great toil and perseverance, but our efforts to secure other game were unsuccessful, and we were rapidly approaching a starving condition."

"Where does the hair restorer come in?" asked the fat man.

"Wait a minute; I'm coming to that. When there was very little left to eat but one piece of apple, we built a figure 4 trap to catch a 'snowshoe.'

"What is a 'snow shoe?' It is a hare with large, flat feet that look like snowshoes. Well, the morning after the trap was set we gathered about it and were delighted to observe that the snow was covered with footprints of the animal we desired to capture. Visions of a prospective stew arose in our minds, and we looked on in breathless suspense while the Harvard graduate knelt by the side of the trap and cautiously peered under its edge. Then he arose. He did not speak, but his face told a tale of terrible disappointment. He gazed at the box a moment and with a mighty kick sent it flying in six different directions. The splinters fell to the ground, but bounding away amid the wreck was a large, fat 'snowshoe,' and he didn't stop. The Harvard man had not seen the white animal in the trap, and our last hope was gone. It had the hair."

"Well?" said the fat man inquiringly.

"Well, what?"

"Why, I thought you were going to say something about 'hair restorers.'"

"Oh, I was about to add that I would have sacrificed two years of my existence to have had that hare in my possession again."

"Yes, I understand that, but how about the hair restorer?"

But the western member seemed displeased with something and did not reply.—Washington Star.

A Man-of-war Barber.

"There is lots of money in the barbering business on board a man-of-war," said a bluejacket on whose cap was a black band bearing in letters of gold the name of the hoodoo ship Olympia in a barber shop in the presence of the reporter.

"How's that?" one of the barbers asked.

"Why, that's easy," answered the bluejacket. "Take the Olympia, the ship I belong to. She has 400 men on board. They all get shaved and have to have their hair cut.

"All a man has to do is to ship as a landsman for three years and be assigned to the barber shop. Your pay from the government will be $36 a month, and you will rank as a petty officer. Then you'll get $1.50 from every man on the ship every three months. That makes $450. Add to that $36 a month, which is $108 a quarter, and there you have $558 a quarter. That's not bad for a barber.

"The barber gets another landsman to wash the towels and other fixin's for $20 a month, but I tell you what, the barber has to hustle."—San Francisco Examiner.

A Spiritual Seance.

"Yes, ma'am," said the medium to a young widow, "I can prove to you that the man whom you have loved is near to us."

"How am I to know?"

"You have but to say, 'Come!' and immediately you will see one of those chairs move that are standing against the wall."

The lady made an effort to control her excitement and said, "Come!"

Suddenly six chairs began to dance a wild tarantella. The lady blushed, paid and went.—Tribuna.

One of them—the most annoying to us in our business—is the carrying off of small articles that are of no earthly use to them—towels, spoons and similar articles. Some say that the hypophosphites alone are sufficient to prevent and cure consumption, if taken in time. Without doubt they exert great good in the beginning stages; they improve the appetite, promote digestion and tone up the nervous system. But they lack the peculiar medicinal properties, and the fat, found in cod-liver oil. The hypophosphites are valuable and the cod-liver oil is valuable.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil, with hypophosphites, contains both of these in the most desirable form. The oil is thoroughly emulsified; that is, partly digested. Sensitive stomachs can bear an emulsion when the raw oil cannot be retained. As the hypophosphites, the medicinal agents in the oil, and the fat itself are each good, why not have the benefit of all? This combination has stood the test of twenty years and has never been equalled.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

has been endorsed by the medical profession for twenty years. (Ask your doctor.) This is because it is always palatable—always uniform—always contains the purest Norwegian Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites.

AN ADVENTURE IN INDIA.

The danger of traveling in India thirty years ago was great—so great, indeed, as to render it extremely difficult to procure a guide and a sufficient number of bearers for the howdah, or wooden cage, in which the most of our traveling was then done. Pressing business required the presence of one of our house at a remote town in the interior, and as my partner was married and had a family, besides being rather effeminate, and I was alone in the world, and of strong, active frame, I volunteered to undertake the hazardous journey, and went to work hunting up attendants—a not very simple affair, when they hear where I designed going. However, after 1 dedays' strenuous exertion, I succeeded in enlisting eight stalwart fellows in my service, and the howdah having been overhauled, I started, parting with a gay laugh from my over-anxious friends, who looked upon me as a voluntary sacrifice to the almighty dollar."

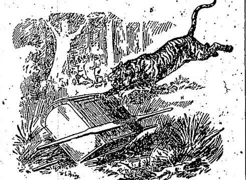
The howdah was one built under my especial supervision a few months before, and I had strength and security in my eye rather than elegance and lightness, so the intervals of exchange by the bearers were not far apart.

In His Death Agonies.

It is almost too commonly known to repeat, that four bearers carried the cage at a time, the unemployed gang running or trotting along at its side, ready to relieve the "watch on deck" when they should grow weary.

It seems strange to a European how these natives, after the exertion necessary to carry a heavy howdah with a man in it for quite a distance, can recover both strength and wind while running alongside, simply relieved of their burden. In our country we would like to sit down a while before taking a second pull at the bellows.

My journey progressed rapidly, seeing that the motive power was neither steamboat nor locomotive, and we had passed over half the distance before I had become weary of the mode of traveling, or my bearers had perceptibly slackened their speed. I had opened the sliding doors of the concern to allow the cool breezes full play, and was buried deeply in thought, when, with a loud cry, my attendants dropped me, and scampered off, much the same as a covey of quail on the first appearance of a pointer's nose.



A Heavy Body Strucck the Howdah.

I had presence of mind enough to close and fasten the small doors, for I knew there was danger; what it was, or in what shape it came, I could not even guess, but I was not suffered long to remain in doubt, for, with a terrific noise, half howl and half roar, a heavy body struck the howdah with tremendous impetus, completely capsizing it, and compelling me, much against my inclination, to perform some very curious and astounding acrobatic feats which would have made even the Hanlon brothers envious had they been there to see them. But they were not; I had no audience, and my impromptu tumblings were but an involuntary private rehearsal, with a decided tendency to give one a splitting headache. These thoughts, or something like them, passed through my head a great deal quicker than I can write or you can read them, and their "even tenor" was again interrupted by a repetition of the tremendous charge from without, which, after knocking the cage (which I blessed my foresight for making so strong) about for a time, had the effect of righting it, and I cautiously peered from one of the loop-holes inside, which had been bored for an occasion like the present. My wonder at the tremendous shocks ceased.

I had seen tigers before, in fact, had hunted them, and had proved myself no mean adversary to the royal brute; but in the whole course of my existence I had never seen, or even heard, of such a rouser as this.

He had drawn off about twenty feet after the last dash, and was crouching upon the ground with an expression of mingled ferocity and surprise plainly visible in his enormous feline face. It was a beautiful mark, as his forehead was in just the position I would have placed it myself, and could I have used the rifle I had with me, I have no doubt but that I could have succeeded in dispatching him with one shot. However, using my rifle was out of the question without opening the door, at least partly, and that was not to be thought of, even for an instant.

I had my pistols—large, trusty, navy revolvers—but I was not so sure of them against such a formidable antagonist. I saw by the increased restlessness of the brute that whatever I did must be done quickly, as in a very short time I might expect to repeat my gymnastic exercises; so, taking deliberate aim at the center of his forehead, I fired.

Scarcely had the report died away when I heard the howling roar, and felt instinctively that the tiger was coming, so, dropping my pistol, I clutched at the sides of the howdah, determined, if possible, to save my head from the very unphisiological bumps, a number of which were already raised upon it by the two previous charges. To my surprise, I felt nothing this time further than a slight shaking, and then heard the rustling of a body upon the roof of the cage—a rustling such as a dog makes when he throws himself upon the floor.

"Ah! ha!" I said to myself, of course as I did not wish to hold any conversation with the "Royal Bengal"—"ah! ha! so you're on the roof, are you? Well, as I can't see you very well up there, I'll order you down;" and I fired straight through the center of the howdah, not with the purpose or with the hope of killing, or even severely wounding him, only, as I have said, of giving him a gentle hint that the ground was, perhaps, his most legitimate sphere of action.

He took the hint with a roar of thanks, or rage, and "came down" on the opposite side to that from which he had ascended, and retired, as before, to the distance of fifteen or twenty feet, surprised, no doubt, at the unceremonious manner in which he was told to "get down."

His face was again toward the howdah, and I noticed a ridge, reaching nearly half the length of the forehead, where my first bullet had plowed its way in the bone for the whole distance.

I saw my error now. In the rather tremulous state of my nerves, I had fired a little high, and the ball had glanced after striking at an obtuse angle. However, I should not throw away another shot in the same manner, since I knew how it was done.

As I saw he was slightly bewildered and had no intention of moving for the moment, I reached for my brandy flask and drank a pretty stiff horn, after which I felt better and more able to cope with Mr. Tiger.

The last-named personage now seemed to consider himself sufficiently recovered to "take another hack of it" (to use a backwoods expression), and began systematically to lash himself into the requisite amount of fury, by the process of threshing the ground around him with his handy caudal appendage, and I conceived my time for action had arrived.

His head was slightly to one side, and the eye presented a very acceptable mark. Resting the barrel of my weapon upon the sill or edge of the loop-hole, I took careful sight at the optic, and blazed away with two chambers in rapid succession.

This time it was a howl—clear, long-drawn and sonorous—which answered my shot, and it was succeeded by a perfect torrent of snarls and moanings, which, in tiger language, are equivalent, I suppose, to curses and invectives in man talk.

Looking out, I saw my late enemy rolling, struggling and lashing the poor, innocent earth in his death agonies, about half-way between his former position and the howdah.

I watched him until, with a cry, almost human in its intensity, he rolled over upon his side and died. Then I opened the door and went out to examine him. I found him a little over seven feet from the tip of his nose to the root of his tail, which, perhaps, was nearly two feet additional.

While I was measuring the brute my attendants came running up, with many expressions of joy at my victory, but no one spoke of their desertion. It seems they had not gone far, as they saw the tiger had directed his attack upon the howdah, and they knew he would not leave it to pursue them, so they had watched and waited until the finale.

Under my direction the brute was robbed of his gaudy skin, and we again took up our line of march.

The rest of our journey was without incident, and, after I had attended to my business, I found a party of gentlemen who were on their way to the coast. I joined them, and the next day had the pleasure of exhibiting the robe-like skin to my friends at ——.—St. Louis Republic.

Whalebone's Advance in Price.

Despite the fact that bicycling among women is said to be injuring the corset trade, whalebone, which still enters largely into the construction of corsets, has risen to a famine price. Half a century ago a great many ships used to start from Sag Harbor, New Bedford and Boston for long cruises in the Arctic seas in search of whales. Those that returned from their dangerous hunting among the ice floes readily sold their cargoes of oil and bone at what were then considered fair prices. Whalebone, for example, used to bring about $500 a ton, most of it being used in umbrella making. Steel, of late years, has been almost entirely substituted for it in this, as well as for almost all other manufacturing purposes. Whalers grew discouraged, and the industry declined, almost to a disappearing point. Whalebone has been steadily growing scarcer and scarcer, and its prices have gone steadily upward. This year it is worth $6,500 a ton, and there have been years within the last decade when for a time it has brought twice that sum. Unless the whaling business takes a new lease of life, however, there seems to be little prospect of the bone bringing less than $6,500 a ton.—Providence Journal.

A False Pretense.

"Well, my son," asked Jimmy Tuffboy's mother, "are you satisfied with your Christmas?"

"Yes, ma'am," replied Jimmy, "only the skates ain't nickel-plated, and dad said he buy me a double-ripper, an' I didn't see it."

"But I am sure you have been happy all day, James."

"I wasn't going to let the fellows know how bad I felt."

In mediaeval times the best perfumes were made in France and Italy, the perfumers of those countries acquiring a dexterity unknown elsewhere and possessing many secret methods of manufacture.

Woman's Wit.

TOLD BY A SOCIETY GIRL.

Something About Morphine, Sulphur, Molasses and Other Things.

From the Evening News, Newark, N. J.

Among the popular society leaders in East Orange, N. J., Emma L. Stoll, a charming young maiden, stands in the foremost rank. She is of a lovable disposition and the light of the social set in which she moves. For two years she has been a sick girl from internal troubles peculiar to women, and having recently recovered, has given our reporter the following interesting account:

"Instead of improving under the care of my physician I became worse. For five weeks I was unable to get out of bed and about six o'clock each morning I suffered horribly. My lips were sore and lacerated from the marks of my teeth, for in my efforts to keep from screaming I sunk my teeth deep into my lips. At such times I rolled and tossed until the bed shook like an aspen leaf and it finally got so serious that the doctor—I won't tell you his name—gave me some morphine pills to take. The very thought of them now makes me shiver. These morphine pills simply put me to sleep for awhile and when I became conscious again my agony was renewed.

"The pain in my stomach and back was more than I could stand. 'Your blood is poor,' said the doctor, 'take sulphur and molasses,' and I did until it was a great wonder that I was not a molasses cake. It was time wasted in taking it because I was not benefited in the least; my suffering continued, but by a mighty effort after being in bed so long, I got up. Oh, but I was a sad sight then. From 115 pounds I had fallen to ninety; my cheeks were pale and sunken and I limped; yes, actually hobbled from the extreme pain in my side. Then I read of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and the testimonials in the News inspired me with hope. I got the pills and took them. Before many days I began to improve and before I had finished one box I felt as if I could go out and walk for miles. I soon stopped limping and through the Pink Pills I soon bid goodbye to my headaches while the pain in my stomach and back slowly but surely succumbed to the influence of these pills that seem to be able to persuade all pain to leave one's body. Now I am as I used to be; well and strong, lighthearted and merry but never without the pills. See I have got some of them now," and from a nearby desk she handed out one of the boxes.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, over-work, or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

SMUT IN OATS.

What It Is and Some Remedies Employed.

Black or loose smut, is a disease affecting the kernel of wheat and other cereals, and is caused by a microscopic plant of a somewhat different nature from rust, known as Ustilago Tritici.

In black smut the whole kernel, and even the chaffy parts, are reduced to a black powder. The black powder is the fruiting stage of the smut, and is composed of myriads of spores. These spores are blown about by the wind and fall on the ground, where they are ready to infect a succeeding crop. More or less remain sticking to the uninfected berries, which, when the seed is sown, causes the disease again.

The remedy is obvious and complete. Sow on ground not previously infected and sow seed which has not come in contact with the smut, or sow with seed on which the smut has been killed.

The following methods are recommended by some experimenters, but their efficacy is denied by others:

Generally speaking, the infected seed may be practically, if not entirely, freed from the disease. The methods used consist in soaking the seed in certain solutions, or simply in hot water. The most common solutions are a saturated solution of common salt and a 5 per cent solution of copper sulphate. The grain should be placed in sacks or baskets and these put into the solution and allowed to stand from twenty-four to thirty-six hours, when the wheat should be spread out to dry.

More recently the Danish investigator, Jansen, has introduced the method of soaking the grain in water at the temperature of 127 to 133 degrees, Farenheit, for five minutes. American experimenters recommend fifteen minutes.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

The Indian Danger Signal.

Consisting of a column of smoke, which, when it appeared at the top of a high hill acted as a signal and warned the Indian that an enemy was approaching, or imparted other information to him.

Just as readily were they with their keen perception able to perceive the signal of the approach of that most dreaded of all enemies, death, noting on the human face the shadow of the approach of this greatest of foes. A face that was sallow or blotched, a bad breath, a lustreless eye, loss of flesh and many other symptoms that proclaim the presence of disease was apparent to them. Their KICKAPOO INDIAN SAGWA given immediately to people thus afflicted and by its great purifying qualities, combined with its re-invigorating and health promoting action, the great vital organs of the body were speedily restored to health, thus insuring to them as a race, lives proverbially long and free from sickness.

Kickapoo Indian Sagwa and other of their remedies can be bought to-day at all druggists, and continue to do for civilized man what the Indian has obtained by their use for centuries.

Slaves of Samoa.

The German company from which we got our black boy Afick, owns and cultivates many thousands of acres in Samoa, and keeps at least a thousand black people to work on its plantations. Two schooners are always busy in bringing fresh batches to Samoa, and in taking home to their own islands the men who have worked out their three years' term of labor. This traffic in human beings is called the "labor trade," and is the life's blood, not only of the great German company, but of all the planters in Fiji, Queensland, New Caledonia, German New Guinea, the Solomon Islands and the new Hebrides. The difference between the labor trade, as it is now carried on under government supervision, and the slave trade, is a great one, but not enough to please sensitive people. In Samoa the missionaries are not allowed by the company to teach these poor savages religion, or to do anything to civilize them and raise them from their monkey-like ignorance. But in other respects the company is not a bad master, and treats its people pretty well. The system, however, is one that cannot be defended, and must, sooner or later, be suppressed.—Lloyd Osbourne's Notes to Stevenson's "Letters to Young Friends," in St. Nicholas.

Little Things.

It is not worth while for young people to grow impatient with the little beginnings of things. A page of problems carefully worked out, a room thoroughly swept, a neatly arranged wood pile; how far these things seem from the goal of our ambitions! And yet the little things well done are the foundation of success. A humble illustration of this truth comes from a Southern state.

A certain old bishop, who was fond of finding odd characters in out-of-the-way places, was visiting in a quiet neighborhood. One day, in a walk with a friend, he came across a cross-roads settlement of a few houses. Among them was a snug little shoe shop, kept by an old negro man, which showed signs of prosperity.

Interested in the old cobbler, the bishop stopped for a chat.

"My friend," he said, "I would not think so small a business as mending shoes would pay so well."

"Ah," said the gentleman with him, "old Cato has the monopoly of shoe mending in this region. No one else gets a job."

"How is that, Cato?" asked the bishop.

"Just so, marster," replied Cato. "It is only little patches put on with little stitches or tiny pegs. But when I take a stitch it is a stitch, and when I drive a peg it holds."

Notes on Lions.

The tongue of a lion is so rough that a close look at it will almost take the skin off the looker. It is not safe to allow a lion to lick yor hand, for, if he licked the skin off and got a taste of the underlying blood, supposing it to be there, he would want the hand and everything adjoining thereto. Nothing more perfect in modern machinery exists than the mechanism by which a lion works his claws. He has five toes on each of his fore feet and four on each of his hind feet. Each toe has a claw.

Nothing about a lion is without reason, and the reason he has more toes and claws on his fore feet than his hind feet is that he has more use for them. If this were not so the majority would be the other way. The lion is nocturnal by choice. He has no particular objection to daylight, but likes to spend it in the bosom of his family, or at least adjacent thereto. It should not be supposed that because he roams about at night he neglects his family. He roams in order to fill the family larder. He kills to eat not for amusement. He never bothers small game so long as there is big game within reach. When feeling fit he can take an ox in his mouth and jump fences and ditches like a professional steeplechaser.—Westminster Budget.

A Jewish Wedding Feast.

There were a great many people coming and going that day at the house of the wise rabbi Isaac Ben Nassur. They were not all Cana people by any means. The bridal feast was spread in the large front room opening upon the porch, and all who had a right to enter were welcomed heartily. Food was plentifully provided, but the merriest hour of the day would be after sunset, when, the day's work being done, all the invited guests would come.

The bridegroom was continually present to receive congratulations and wishes. With him were several young men of his more intimate friends; but decidedly the most important figure in that room was Isaac himself. As master of the house and as ruler of the feast, he sat at the head of the long table provided for the occasion. His dress was as simple as ever, but it seemed to have undergone a change, he wore it with so grand an air. He appeared to be happy, and he received great respect from the throng of people who came to congratulate him upon the marriage of his son. So the marriage feast went on until the midday was past and the shadows began to lengthen in the streets of Cana.—"The Swordmaker's Son," by W. O. Stoddard, in St. Nicholas.

A Pretty Experiment.

With so simple an article as a red cabbage, a very old but pretty little chemical experiment may be made by the young people, with the result of amusing and astonishing those around them. The effects may be strikingly shown in this manner: Cut three leaves of the cabbage into small pieces, and, after placing them in a basin, pour a pint of boiling water over them, letting them stand an hour; then pour off the liquid into a decanter. It will be of fine blue color. Then take four wine glasses. Into one put six drops of strong vinegar; into another six drops of solution of soda; into a third the same quantity of a strong solution of alum; and let the fourth glass remain empty. Fill up the glasses from the decanter, and the liquid poured into the glass containing the acid will quickly change to a beautiful red; that poured with the soda will be a fine green, and that poured into the empty glass will remain unchanged.

A Singular Form of Monomania.

There is a class of people, rational enough in other respects, who are certainly monomaniacs in dosing themselves. They are constantly trying experiments upon their stomachs, their bowels, their livers and their kidneys with trashy nostrums. When these organs are really out of order, if they would only use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, they would, if not hopelessly insane, perceive its superiority.

PAID THE PENALTY

THE MURDER OF CATHERINE GING IS AVENGED.

Harry Hayward, one of the Most Remarkable Criminals in the Annals of History, Pays the Forfeit of his Life on the Gallows—He Joked Even With the Noose on his Neck, but at the Request of Friends Asked God's Forgiveness for What he Had Done.

Minneapolis, Dec. 11.—"God, for Christ's sake have mercy on my soul."

These were the last words of Harry T. Hayward ere he dropped to his death. It was 2:16 o'clock when Sheriff Holmberg pulled the lever, almost ere the sound of his voice had died away, and with a snap the heavy body fell eight feet, and then brought up with a tremor.

There was a slight snap as if of the breaking of a neck, and all was over. The body swayed slightly, and the physicians rushed to the body and felt the pulse. Minute after minute had passed, ere the pulsations ceased. Then he was dead. With the greatest nerve ever displayed by a criminal, with a practical confession of his misdeeds upon his lips, Hayward died. There can no longer be any doubt, if any was felt before. He has said on the gallows that he had wronged his brother, and that Adry had never wronged him, that no one had ever wronged him.

With laughter in his voice, he dined sumptuously, and then, with three hearty cheers, he joined the procession, and with his black robe swinging with his stride he mounted the scaffold and paid the penalty of his crime.

Brothers Become Reconciled.

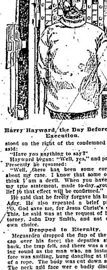
There was a complete if not very effecting reconciliation between the brothers about 11:15. Harry told Adry, whom he sent for, that he, Harry, had done him an injury, and he wanted to be pardoned. There was a strong hand clasp and Harry told his brother that his last wish was that he should become reconciled with his parents. Adry promised.

His Last Words.

He was the least affected of any one present when the deputies came to prepare him and joked about putting on the black robe that was brought him. He did not like to hide his clothes, and remarked that he might as well have none. With the black cap on top of his head and his face smiling, he stepped out of the cell and followed Sheriff Holmberg. There was no hurry. He spoke pleasantly as he walked with Deputies Bright and Anderson on either side and a little behind him.

As Hayward entered the death chamber and turned to the left to ascend the gallows steps he smiled pleasantly and said: "Good evening, gentlemen."

Nobody responded. There was a mark in the middle of the trap, and Hayward carefully adjusted his feet to the line. He had hardly done so when Sheriff Holmberg, who stood on the right of the condemned man, said:



Harry Hayward, the Day Before the Execution.

"Have you anything to say?"

Hayward began: "Well, yes," and paused. Presently he resumed:

"Well, there has been some curiosity about my case. I know that some of you think I am a devil. When you have read my true statement, made to-day, your belief to that effect will be confirmed."

He said that he freely forgave his brother Adry. He also repeated a brief prayer: "O, God save me, for Jesus Christ's sake." This, he said was at the request of his attorney, John Day Smith, and not of his own choice.

Dropped to Eternity.

Megaarden dropped the flap of the black cap over his face; the deputies stepped back, the trap fell, and there was a sickening sound as the man who, an instant before was smiling, hung dangling at the end of a rope. The body was cut down at 2:35. The neck and face were badly discolored and the vertebrae was not dislocated, death being due to strangulation.

The Last Hope.

Yesterday afternoon R. R. Odell, formerly attorney for Claus Blixt, and who has figured more or less in the Hayward case, appeared before the supreme court and asked for a stay of proceedings, pending the appointment of a commission of lunacy. He argued at considerable length on the matter, and cited Harry's conduct again and again as evidence that the condemned man was insane.

The court heard him patiently, but his remarks seemed to have no effect. When he concluded his argument the announcement was made that his request for a stay of proceedings would be refused, and the supreme court would take no steps to interfere with the hanging.

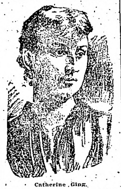
HIS CRIME.

Story of the Awful Crime for Which He Was Hanged.

The crime for which Harry T. Hayward suffers the extreme penalty of the law was deemed a particularly atrocious one, so much so, in fact, that the newspaper reading public of the civilized globe was made aware of the main details, and it may be stamped as the greatest crime of the year in which it occurred. It might have stood without a parallel for many years but for the wonderful Holmes and Durrant crimes, which followed it in the present year.

Monday, Dec. 3, 1894, at about 8 o'clock in the evening, William U. Erhardt, who lived a short distance beyond the upper end of Lake Calhoun, was returning to his home. He left the St. Louis Park car at a point where it turns off from the boulevard, and on foot was hurrying to his own home. At one point, only a short distance from where he lived, the road wound through a tamarack swamp, where it had been filled to grade. At one side of this road the young man saw an object lying upon the ground, which, upon closer examination, he discovered to be the body of a woman of rather large frame. She was lying partially on her face, with one arm extended and the other drawn under her; the dress was partially thrown into disorder, exposing a portion of a black stocking, and a pool of blood was running slowly away from beneath the head.

Only a short time before, a few moments, in fact, the young man had seen a horse and buggy speed by in a very uncertain manner, and at once he thought of a runaway and its attendant accident. Hurriedly he summoned his brother, Frank C. Erhardt, and the latter secured a lantern and went to the assistance of the woman, while William hurried for a physician as fast as speed could take him. Frank made a closer inspection, saw that the woman had on a seal skin sacque, blue gown, and that a sailor hat was lying near her on the ground. Her hands were covered with silk mittens.



Catherine Ging.

It was not long before there were physicians at the scene, and Dr. Russell pronounced the lady dead. Shortly afterwards the patrol wagon appeared and the corpse was taken to the county morgue, where it was placed upon a slab.

Thought It an Accident.

Several hours had elapsed and yet the word had gone out that a woman had been killed by a runaway accident. John F. Walsh, the morgue keeper, washed the lady and took off the clothing. It was not his business to examine it critically. It was 11 o'clock when Coroner Willis P. Spring saw fit to make an examination, and he saw that the nose was badly crushed and that the skull was fractured in two places. Back of the right ear was a clot of blood, and upon examining closer he discovered that it was a small hole, made by a bullet, for in probing the bullet came to light. His first thought was that a suicide had been discovered, but nevertheless he communicated his find to the police.

Other matters were transpiring, however, in other parts of the city. Report had gone out that a lady who had the name "Ging" on her clothing had been killed in an accident. The accident theory was augmented by the reports received by the police. At about 9 o'clock it was learned that a small buckskin colored horse, which had been hired earlier in the evening by Catherine M. Ging, a stylish dressmaker, had come home to the barn of Henry Goosman, hauling the buggy with it, but with no occupant. After stabling the horse the stable man, Henry Gilbert, had discovered a thick, matted pool of blood almost in the center of the seat. In the bottom of the buggy was a dripping of thinner blood, where it had run from the seat to the buggy bottom. On the right bow of the top was a spot also, and there were one or two spots on the inside of the top. The horse had come in at a jog trot, with the lines hanging over the dashboard, and there was no blood upon the lines.

All Was Excitement.

There was a hue and cry all over. No one had discovered the revolver that had been the means to the end, and it was a mystery. The liveryman stated that Miss Ging had taken out the same rig the two nights previous, and had brought it back after having been gone an hour. Reporters and police hurried to the Ozark flats, where the young woman's niece, Miss Ireland, resided with her, and there the news was communicated to her. While they were there Harry T. Hayward, a son of the owner of the flat, returned, after having been at the theater with Miss Mabel Bartleson, and was informed of the trouble. Taking Emil Ferrant with him, they went to police headquarters, where they discovered that there had been an accident as stated. There Hayward made the announcement—the first one—that Miss Ging had been murdered for her money. He was certain that it had been a murder. Later he met the detectives, and learned that she had been killed by a pistol ball.

"She has been murdered," he cried, "and my $2,000 is gone."

It was learned that Hayward knew considerable of the habits of the young woman, and he was questioned to see if he could throw any light upon the matter. He could only say that he had loaned her considerable money, and that the only security she had given him was life insurance policies. To prove his statement he showed letters from her acknowledging the loan. He could give no information except in a vague way as to who might be suspected, and that was all that was done that night. It was a mystery, and it seemed as if it never would be solved.

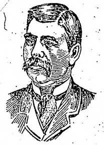
Elder Stewart's Story.

There were so many threads to the woof, however, that no one could surmise how truly wonderfully providence was working. Several days before the murder Adry Hayward, a brother of Harry, called upon Levi M. Stewart, an old gentleman well known in business and real estate circles, who had been a friend of the family. To him, Adry told a most shocking, improbable tale. It was to the effect that his brother had attempted to secure his aid in murdering a woman—a dressmaker—for her money, and that Harry already had the policies of insurance, upon which the plan was laid. Adry told how he had refused, but that Harry and another confederate were intending to accomplish the murder. Mr. Stewart could not believe it, and knowing Harry was one of the greatest liars he had ever met, he quieted Adry, and laughed the matter away. This was three days before the murder.

The day after the murder, Dec. 4, Mayor W. H. Eustis had Harry Hayward before himself and the chief of police, and tried to get more information. He told his story apparently in a straightforward manner, and was allowed to go. There was no suspicion against him. The next day was Dec. 5, and Albert H. Hall, assistant county attorney, who had been connected in a legal way with Mr. Stewart, received a long letter from him, telling him of the interview with Adry, and stating that Adry's story was just exactly the way in which the murder occurred. If Adry had told that story three days before the murder, it was proof positive. Before Mr. Hall proceeded upon the letter, F. A. Briggs came to the police with a story, that at one time Hayward had planned to have him killed for revenge, and the man who was to do the deed was a man named Claus A. Blixt, an engineer in the Ozark flats, in the employ of the Haywards. Here was another clue, and the detectives were put at work upon it.

The Famous Sweat Box.

At the same time, Mr. Hall called upon the mayor, and Harry Hayward was again sent for. He had been about making inquiries as to the collection of the $10,000 insurance policies, but he came to the police headquarters willingly and not in the least ruffled. It was 10 o'clock Wednesday morning when Hayward called at headquarters, and it was an all-day task. He was taken to the West hotel, where there was a secret session, and his statement was taken down by George Hitchcock, court stenographer. During the inquisition Hayward was taken to the morgue, and in a tragic way made to face the dead face of the murdered woman. He did not flinch.



CLAUS A. BLIXT,

Who Is Serving a Life Sentence in Stillwater for the Murder.

"Poor girl—poor dead girl," he said. "If you could only speak now, you could tell who it was."

At 5:30 o'clock, Dec. 5, a warrant was read to Hayward, and he was under arrest. Six hours later, Adry Hayward was arrested, charged with firing the fatal shot. This arrest was made under the chance that Adry might have carried out the plot as requested by Harry. The two brothers were locked in cages at the county jail. The public was getting excited, for the real facts had not yet been made public property. Adry was put through the pumping process, but at first would say nothing. Finally he was taken before Mr. Stewart and gave in to the advice of the latter, telling the police the same story he had told Mr. Stewart three days before the murder, but adding the name of the confederate, Claus A. Blixt. There was no rest for the officers those days, and on Friday, Dec. 7, Blixt and his wife were taken into custody, and were placed in the lock-up, a mile from where the brothers were confined, and finally ten miles away, for Harry and Adry were spirited off to St. Paul, where they were taken care of in the Ramsey county jail for safer keeping.

Claus Blixt Confesses.

Mrs. Blixt told all she knew at once, which was to the effect that Hayward and Blixt had been almost constantly together for some time before the murder in the engine room of the flats. She was allowed to go, but was shadowed. From Friday until Sunday the police had nothing aside from the story of Adry, but on Sunday Blixt sent for the officers, and in an agony of fear, asked to be allowed to confess. A stenographer was sent for, and Blixt told how Harry Hayward, for months had been trying to get him to murder Miss Ging. In order to prepare him for it he had been told the most horrible tales of the murders and crimes Harry said he had committed. Then Blixt was induced to burn a barn, and little by little found himself under the influence of his employer.

Blixt said he was afraid and frightened, but Harry finally filled him up with liquor, and the deed was done. There was a volume telling the various different schemes Harry laid, but finally, Harry went to the flat and gave Blixt some whisky. Blixt was to meet him near the lake after the girl was dead, and get into the buggy and dispose of the body after Harry had killed her. True to the plan, he took a car to the point and waited until he heard a buggy coming. He heard a shot, and then Harry drove up, and jumped out.

"Be sure she is dead," cried Harry, "before you leave her."

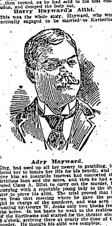
Throws the Body Out.

Blixt jumped in and drove with one hand, Harry running back toward the city. He drove on until he had gone a mile into the country, then he turned around. Coming back, he was frightened at the dead face and pulled a robe over the form, holding it in the corner of the buggy with his arm until he came to the swamp, where he reached down, lifted the feet over the side, gave the body a lurch and it slid out, the hind wheel passing over the body. Then he drove a distance and left the buggy, unhitched, walked up a railway track, saw a man who was acting flagman at a crossing, asked him when a car would come, took a Lyndale car down town, met a friend and shook dice for beer, went to a jeweler's and left his watch to be fixed, went out on Bloomington avenue, where he had told his wife he was going when he went out, tried to see a man to collect $1.60 borrowed money from him, failed and went home to his wife and went to bed.

The police were jubilant, but there was a sudden check to their joy when they discovered that there was not the least doubt but what Hayward could account for his time from about 8 o'clock until morning. Here was a hitch, for Harry was sitting in the Grand opera house, laughing at Evans and Hoey all that time. Again Blixt was approached, and he broke down and made another confession. The only difference was that he had used one of Harry's earlier plans, and so coupled it with the actual occurrence that it let him out of the murder. In his confession he had met Harry down town, at Hennepin avenue and the Kenwood boulevard, there entered the buggy with Miss Ging, Harry telling her he would meet them the other side of the lake with a team. They drove out until they reached the woods about a mile from the city, where Blixt placed the muzzle of a revolver behind her ear as she leaned forward to look for Harry, and discharged the contents into her head. She fell back dead, and Blixt drove on, then turned, as he had said in his first confession, and dumped the body out.

Harry Hayward's Alibi.

This was the whole story. Hayward, who was practically engaged to be married to Katherine Ging, had used up all her money in gambling, induced her to insure her life for his benefit, and to give him an insurable interest had concocted the fictitious loan and the notes, and then he had secured Claus A. Blixt to carry out the murder, he hurrying with a reputable young lady to the theater to prove his alibi. The trial proved that he ran from that meeting where he gave the poor girl in charge of the murderer, and was seen so running by George W. Jenks only two blocks from the scene. In hot haste he went to the residence of the Bartlesons and started for the theater about 8 o'clock, arriving there at nearly the time of the murder. He thought his alibi was complete.



Adry Hayward.

To tell the complete history of the whole scheming of the polished villain is not for a condensed narrative like this. After the confession of Blixt, there was much work to be done. Hayward and his brother were in St. Paul, but it was thought better to have the men separated. In the meantime W. E. Hale and John Day Smith were engaged as counsel for Harry. The parents paid no attention to Adry, and right here is one of the significant facts in connection with the case. From the first the parents tried every means to save Harry and let Adry go without an attorney. Some shrewd people have guessed that it was because they knew Adry was not guilty.

Taken Up by the Grand Jury.

Matters were progressing swiftly, and on Monday, Dec. 10, the grand jury began the investigation of the case, using Adry as a witness, which showed that he was not to be convinced at that time at least. The afternoon of Tuesday, Dec. 11, two indictments were returned against the murderers, and on Thursday, Dec. 13, the indictments were presented and filed. Monday, Dec. 17 Blixt was arraigned and pleaded guilty. Judge Hicks saw his condition, however, and appointed W. J. Hahn and Frank Carleton back to the jail, after which he was visited by the attorneys. They called to see him, but had little time to make any arrangements, for R. R. Odell had secured the appointment from Blixt's people, and he appeared again before the court and altered his plea. He was more quiet and seemed to take great consolation in religion. Odell had promised him that he should not die, and Blixt had left his Bible in his cell in consequence.

One peculiar feature of the Hayward case was the manner in which the number 13 happened by chance. It was Dec. 13 that was set for the hearing in the municipal court, and it was Dec. 13 that the indictment was returned. Monday, Dec. 17, Hayward appeared before Judge Hicks and W. E. Hale asked for time to plead. He was given until Saturday, and Mr. Hale dropped out of the case, W. W. Erwin supplanting him. Some said that Mr. Hale had too stern a conscience to shoulder the case. Sheriff Ege brought Hayward over from St. Paul without irons and no one would have known that he was a prisoner. No one knew him as he took passage on an interurban car, and there was no excitement. Saturday, Dec. 22, Hayward pleaded not guilty and the case was set for Monday, Jan. 21.

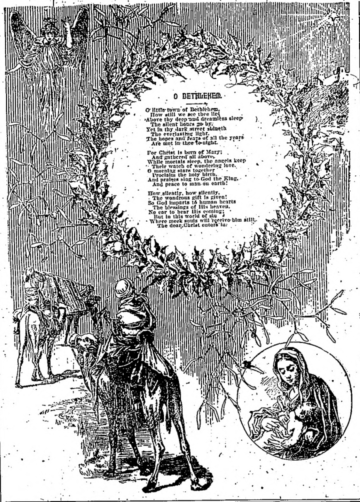
Before the trial there were many exciting incidents. Joe Mannix tried a wonderful coup, which failed. It was the springing upon the prisoner of the twin sister of the murdered lady, Julia Ging, but Harry was not caught napping, and spoke pleasantly. He was too sharp for them. The public is familiar with that truly great trial. In spite of the extreme cold of the day, a perfect mob filled the streets, and for seven long weeks its numbers never diminished about the doors of Labor Temple, where the trial was held. It was a close, unhealthy place, and before the case was completed, jurors and attorneys were taken ill, and the case was delayed, but bravely they all worked on, until it was over.

The Wonderful Trial.

The great trial began Jan. 21, and the last witness was examined March 2, and after taking a portion of three days, W. W. Erwin asked for the court's charge Friday morning, March 8. It had been a long fight. Over 200 jurors had been examined, and thirteen had been chosen, one being excused because of a feeling against the death penalty. Over 100 witnesses had been examined in the case, and hundreds of thousands had heard the trial and hundreds had shouted, "Hang him, hang him!" as the young man passed from the court room to the jail. At 10:08 o'clock the morning of Friday, March 8, John Denny, John Smith, John M. Kimball, N. McNeill, Lindsay Webb, C. S. Philbrick, John Donn, S. H. Dyer, Charles A. Pribble, M. Eckes, Ben T. Dickey and B. H. Timberlake, the twelve jurors, retired to the jury room, and at 2:08 o'clock the verdict was read which doomed the prisoner to death. For hours before he had said that in two hours he would be a free man. Deputy Clerk H. L. Kobler took the verdict and recorded it.

The prisoner protested his innocence, and was cool and collected through the long hours until Monday, March 11, when in the little court room used for criminal work in the court house Judge Smith pronounced sentence. Solemnly the words came:

"It is considered and adjudged that you, Harry T. Hayward, as punishment for the crime of murder in the first degree, of which you have been convicted, be taken from here hence to the county jail of the county of Hennepin, and there be confined, and that thereafter after the lapse of three calendar months from this day, and at a time to be fixed by the governor of the State of Minnesota, and designated by his warrant, you be taken to the place of execution and there be hanged by the neck until you are dead."



O BETHLEHEM.

O little town of Bethlehem,
How still we see thee lie!
Above thy deep and dreamless sleep
The silent hours go by.
Yet in thy dark street shineth
The everlasting light.
The hopes and fears of all the years
Are met in thee to-night.

For Christ is born of Mary;
And gathered all above,
While mortals sleep, the angels keep
Their watch of wondering love.
O morning stars together
Proclaim the holy birth,
And praises sing to God the King,
And peace to man on earth!

How silently, how silently,
The wondrous gift is given!
So God imparts to human hearts
The blessings of His heaven.
No ear to hear His coming;
But in this world of sin
Where meek souls will receive him still,
The dear Christ enters in.

THE SANTA CLAUS COMPANY (UNLIMITED).

These days of corporations it would truly seem to be
A splendid plan if Santa Claus would look about and see
If he could not incorporate himself, and so expand
His usefulness to cover every corner of the land.

I've noticed, as I've looked about on Christmas days gone by,
A lot of little children who have failed to catch his eye,
Who when the Yule was at its height had not a single toy
Or bit of peppermint to fill their little souls with joy.

And there have been some persons who have ventured to remark
Of credence in his being they had not the slightest spark,
For had there been a person of his kind 'twas very sure,
There'd be some signs of presents in the hovels of the poor,

Which is a point he'll have to meet, with many of that sort
If he shall ever find himself haled up before the court.
But I, who've always found him most attentive unto me,
Am certain that he does exist and works most faithfully.

But certain, too, am I that in these Christmases of late
He's found his work, unaided, for his strength by far too great;
And hence I think that he'd do well to form a company
And everywhere throughout the land to place an agency.

And all who love him for his labors in the days now past
Can put their names down in his books—the stock should go right fast.
It doesn't seem that it could meet with failure, just because They must be few who would not take stock in old Santa Claus.

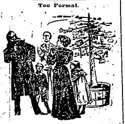
—Carlyle Smith, in the "Editor's Drawer," in Harper's Magazine for December.

Too Formal.



Mr. Clerkley (of New York)—Well, Cousin Dick, what do you think of our Christmas tree? Nothing lacking, is there?

Cousin Dick (of Deadgulch)—Wa-al, cousin, seems t' me ef yer only had a couple uv injuns er hoss thieves hangin' on it, it ud look a leetle more homelike.—Judge.

Too Near the First of the Month.

"One thing I've got against Christmas."

"What's that?"

"It comes too late in the month."

"How does that affect it?"

"Why, when a man's wife gives him a splendid present the bill is sent to him in about a week. It would be better if he had about three weeks to get ready for it."

HAIL TO FATHER CHRISTMAS

All hail to Father Christmas,
A merry soul is he;
Within his train he ever brings
Good cheer and jollity.
We love his ruddy visage,
With happy smiles aglow;
We love his crown of holly green,
And pearly mistletoe.
So here's to Father Christmas,
To all hearts ever dear;
Let voices sing and loudly ring
Whilst cheer succeeds cheer.

All hail to Father Christmas,
He kindles thoughts to-day
Of loved ones who are sojourning
In lands far, far away.
We almost hear their greetings
Behold each cherished face,
For Christmas with his magic wand
As naught makes leagues of space.
So here's to Father Christmas,
To all hearts ever dear;
Let voices sing, and loudly ring
Whilst cheer succeeds to cheer.

All hail to Father Christmas,
Who aye befriends the poor;
His presence makes the purses ope
And yield their golden store.
He wields a wand of magic,
That most potent be,
For even from the miser's hoard
He draws forth charity
So here's to Father Christmas,
Whilst cheer succeeds cheer.

THE XMAS PUDDING TREE

Far, far away in a distant clime,
A Fairy small told me,
Over the frosty snow and rime
Is a rich plum-pudding-tree;
A pudding-tree so large and fine,
That never a day doth pass
That dozens of puddings and pies divine
Don't fall on the soft green grass.

And I told the Fairy that told me that
To see that when Christmas came—
To take good care—that a juicy fat
Plum-pudding bore my name;
For I have three boys, with appetites
As big as the Fairy was wee,
Who long for a series of great deep bites
In the fruit of that splendid tree.

And I think that the noise of the merry bells
That jingle so loud in my ear
Is the longed-for sound that comes and tells
That the pudding is almost here.
And I'm sure I hear, as I listen again,
On the roads so white and hard,
The pattering hoofs of the reindeer twain,
And the paws of the rabbit guard.

So gather, my boys, come gather about
Our home mahogany tree;
Cease not your din or your noisy rout,
But join in a "three-times-three"
For the distant folk of that lovely land
Who under the spice-tree play,
Who are bringing to us that pudding grand
To gladden our Christmas Day.

NOW IN THE TOMB

LAST ACT IN THE HAYWARD TRAGEDY IN MINNEAPOLIS.

The Half-Crazed Mother Falls in a Faint Before the Bier—An Autopsy on the Body of the Executed Murderer—Harry Confessed the Ging Murder, and Also Claimed to Have Committed Other Crimes.

Minneapolis, Dec. 13.—At the simple burial services over the remains of Harry Hayward at Lakewood cemetery there occurred one of the most tragic incidents of the many which have marked the course of his trial and execution. The ceremony was held in the little chapel at the cemetery, over the vault in which the body will rest until spring, and was attended by a very few friends and the members of the family, Adry included. At the services Rev. M. D. Shutter officiated.

After the words of Scripture and prayer from Dr. Shutter, Mrs. Hayward desired to place some flowers on the casket, and, supported by her son, Dr. Thaddeus, and her husband, advanced to do so. When she walked around the head of the coffin strewing carnations as she did so. When she had distributed her flowers and had arrived at the right hand side of the bier she hesitated. In response to a signal from her Thaddeus and her husband loosened their support of her and she stood alone. To every one's surprise she raised her clenched hands and broke forth in a low moaning tone:

"Poor, dear Harry! Poor, dear Harry! My baby boy! My dear baby boy! God has forgiven him! God has forgiven him! Poor, dear Harry! Poor, dear Harry! Be a brave mother, be brave and strong! The chains bind me, but they can't chain my soul! I come again! Poor, dear Harry! Poor, dear Harry! My baby boy!"

With this the mother half-turned and started toward where Adry sat. Thaddeus and Mr. Hayward caught her, but she pushed forward and they followed, still supporting her. In front of Adry she stopped, and, lifting his face in her hands, said:

"Tell him I've forgiven him, mother." Her reproachful tones echoed in the silent room. Seemingly half-crazed, the bereaved mother turned from her elder boy to where her youngest, her darling, lay, but Mr. Hayward, Thaddeus and Adry persuaded her to turn back, and as she did so she fell fainting into the seat near by.

The few present were deeply impressed by Mrs. Hayward's outburst of sorrow, but most affecting of all was her approach to Adry and her words to him as though Harry were speaking: "Tell him I've forgiven him, mother."

The decorations at the service were very simple, Ernest Goodsell bringing some lilies and friends sending some roses. The only other flowers were the pink carnations the mother herself dropped on her son's coffin.

Made a Clean Breast.

It is said that confession is good for the soul. If there is any truth in that statement, Harry Hayward will have at least one mark to his credit when his balance sheet is made up in the hereafter. In the course of the dictation Harry, after wandering for days through the major and minor crimes of his life, came to the great climax, and freely and frankly admitted that he inspired Blixt to fire the shot that killed Miss Ging; that he plotted and planned the ruination of the dressmaker, and worked on the weak mind of the poor, lowly janitor until he had become master of his soul and body, and then sent him out to consummate the crime which had long lain dormant in Hayward's plotting mind. It was, as it was predicted it would be, a full and minute account of the whole crime.

Aside from that part of it which relates to the Ging murder the statement is a regular catalogue of crimes of all degrees from burglaries such as the one in the woods near Lake Calhoun, where Hayward himself was apparently one of the victims, to arsons involving immense amounts of property, and of murders scattered over a number of years and in such widely different localities as New Jersey and Arizona.

A Hot Story.

A most startling statement was made last night. It was that Claus A. Blixt did not kill Catherine Ging, but that Harry T. Hayward not only plotted her death, but actually committed the deed. It was further stated that these facts have been in possession of the authorities, city and county, for some time, but were not made known, because it was unnecessary to secure the conviction of the man who expiated his crime on the gallows. Catherine Ging, the reporter's informant states, was beaten to death by Hayward while driving between the West hotel and Lowry Hill, the instrument, presumably, being the T rail which was such an important factor in the evidence during the trial. He stated farther that when Blixt entered the buggy Catherine Ging was dead and that when he fired a bullet through her head it was into a corpse. To conciliate the statement made by Blixt that Miss Ging, after he entered the vehicle, turned and looked behind to see if Harry, whom she expected, was coming, he states that Blixt was in a condition on account of drugs administered by Hayward, in which he was absolutely ignorant of his surroundings, or else in an imaginative mood to such a degree as would make him actually think that the woman at his side had spoken or moved. The statement made above, it is said, will form part of the confession of Hayward, soon to be published, and it is further believed he had reference to this when, just before the trap was sprung, he stated that when those who had considered him to be a regular devil would, if they knew his past life, be firmly convinced of the fact.

The Great Northern have been furnishing plenty of cars the past week every train bringing in thirty or more cattles, So far however they have been unable to haul out the loads and loaded cars have had to remain over. This evening the train went out with twenty seven loaded cars besides the two coaches and more to pick up at Wylie. Every seat in the coaches were full. Will we get a daily train? Do you say Oh No? If we will only get an extra, Daily trains do not pay where there is no complation. They may have to run our trains in two or three sections but a daily, never.

A correspondent calls attention to the fact that in the days of the revolution the population of Great Britian was 16,000,000, and that of the colonies but 3,000,000. The merchants of New York, Boston, and in fact, all the larger cities. were almost unanimously in favor of Great Britian,—this because they were afraid of "disturbing business. We now have the same class of cowards in our midst that our forefathers had in revolution time,—but with the difference of a population of 70,000,000 of people, as against 38,000,000 for what was then called the mother Country. Those who have control of the finances of the country are afraid to regulate our own money and coinage system, without the consent of Great Britian! The same spirit which infused the three millions of people one hundred and twenty years ago to assert their independance of the mother country, as against a people five times more numerous, would easily accomblish results if infused into our present population which is now almost two times greater than Great Britain. One of the great difficulties lies in the fact that the majority of the volume of money which this country uses is to be found along the Atlantic coast where the people still think that New England, New York Pennsylvania and Deleware still constitute the United States and judge accordingly.—Penny Press.

Representative Towne today introduced a bill similar to the one which passed the house last session providing for the sale of pine upon the Red Lake and White Earth Chippewa Indian reservation, in forty acre tracts, as fast as 160 acres or less in the discretion of the secretary of the interior have been examined and surveyed. This bill differs from the measure of last session in that Towne has provided that a sale may take place when less than 100 acres have been surveyed, and he has also added a proviso that met the objection of Senator Davis who prevented the passage of a similar bill last session This provides that no timber upon the sections numbered 16 and 36 in each township so surveyed shall be selected until the claim of the state of Minnesota to ownership of these sections, as part of the school lands of the state, shall have been determined. Towne also introduced a bill to pay the claim of certain merchants who furnished supplies to the Fond du Lac Indians in Minnesota.—Journal.

MYSTERY OF SOMNAMBULISM.

The Story of a Strange Experience Had by a Detective.

"The strangest experience I ever had," said a well known detective to the Cincinnati Tribune, "was in locating a sneak-thief who systematically robbed a business man's residence. There had been a number of robberies extending over a considerable space of time. The servants of the house had been changed several times, and yet the thefts continued. About once a week some one entered the man's sleeping apartment and took what money he had, if any, and, if not, succeeded in obtaining some of his wife's jewels or valuable silverware. I was employed in the case and made a thorough examination of the premises. At first I thought the work was done by some one inside the house, but my client told me that he had surprised the man one night, and that he went out the window and down the porch, which was undoubtedly the way he came in. He described the man as being small, thin and pale and wearing a peculiar mask. The description did not suit any one in the house or any one whom the business man knew.

"My client slept in the front room and his wife in one adjoining, there being double doors between them. I searched the pawnshops thoroughly and could find no trace of the missing jewels or silverware, and after watching the house from the outside for several nights, during which time there was another robbery, I prepared to sleep in my client's room, to which he readily consented. The first night I slept there my client's belongings were undisturbed, but several dollars in loose change had been abstracted from my own pockets, though usually I am a very light sleeper and awake at once by any unusual noise. I said nothing about my own loss, but concluded to remain awake thereafter.

"For several nights nothing occurred, when one morning about 2 o'clock a form came through the folding doors that connected the room where I was with that occupied by the wife of my client. I pretended to be asleep and waited the thief's approach. It looked like a pale faced boy. Over its head was thrown a dark shawl that gave the appearance of a mask and a coat, but the form was barefooted and had on nothing besides the shawl but a nightgown. Noiselessly it glided to the window, unlocked it and passed out on the porch. I knew in a moment that the person was the wife of my client, and I followed at once. As she climbed down the porch the moon shone directly in her face, and I saw that she was asleep. The woman went directly to an arbor that had once been a springhouse, and lifting a loose board, dropped something and returned the way she came to her own apartment.

"I immediately investigated and found that in the place formerly used for the storage of milk and butter the missing jewels, silver and money were piled. The next morning I told my client and showed him where the missing articles were. He stated that his wife was possessed of an almost insane fear that at some time he would fail and be reduced to want, although entirely rational upon all other subjects. This probably took possession of her mind while she slept, and being of a somnambulistic tendency her hoarding of the valuables was explained. When awake she had no recollection whatever of her nightly depredations."

The Shining Face of Moses.

All down through the ages a mistake has been perpetuated as to the meaning of the Hebrew word "karan," "to emit rays like horns." It is the word used in Exodus xxxiv, 29, to describe the shining face of Moses after he had talked with the Lord. The Septuagint translated it into Greek, "his head was horned." So all through the middle ages and the period of great Italian art the Vulgate had it (whence Michael Angelo and other artists got the idea, Angelo giving to Moses two flamelike locks of hair on the head); the Cranmer Bible and the Douay Catholic English Bible continued the queer error. King James' version at last got it right, "the skin of Moses' face shone, and Moses put the veil upon his face," etc.—Boston Transcript.

Curious Chinese Benevolence.

In times of pestilence persons are permitted to witness gratuitously theatrical performances and displays of fireworks, the object being that their minds may be distracted thereby from the prevailing epidemic. In large cities places are provided in which those who in desperation give up the battle of life may quietly lay themselves down and die.—Translation of Victoria Institute.

WRESTLING IN JAPAN.

A Quaint Affair Conducted According to Ancient Rules.

You may see a wrestling exhibition on almost any Sunday in one of the big towns of Japan, and the "gate" is generally satisfactory to the promoters. Even though the elite of the profession be engaged, you may gain admission to the inclosure for 6 cents, which, when silver is on the best of bimetallic terms, do not represent a threepenny bit. But should you have any pretensions to "gentility" you must spend $1 in purchasing the leasehold of a box, something like a miniature sheep pen, in which you squat with as much comfort to yourself as may be. The boxes around you are filled with the Japanese bourgeois, with a few women and children, who are consuming sweetmeats and watermelon with laudable perseverance, while the twopenny public have to stand on the floor of the "house" and get the best view they can. In the center is a raised platform about 10 feet square, with an earthen floor, and a canopy of rice matting overhead to keep the sun off the performers.

There is about the procedure a flavor of old Japan which is becoming rare nowadays. For example, all wrestlers wear their hair in the old fashioned truncated cue. It is about all they do wear. And the umpire and his attendant are clad in the now obsolete kamishimo, or ceremonial costume, the chief peculiarity of which is the projecting wings of gauze. The umpire does not communicate directly with the combatants or audience. He is much too dignified for that. An attendant announces his decisions with many bows, and with much fan play recites the titles of the wrestlers as they appear.

Two brawny giants emerge from the retiring room at the corner—Kobe and Osaka we will call them—amid much applause. Naked except for a loincloth and a fringe of blue cord attached to a waistband, they strut to the platform in the glory of 250 pounds of avoirdupois and gigantic muscles coyly hidden beneath an inch of fat. Kobe takes a mouthful of water from the bucket at the corner of the platform and sprays it over his limbs. Osaka follows suit. Next they abstract a pinch of salt from a box near by, wrap it in a morsel of paper and bury it in the earth that covers the platform. This for luck. Having slapped their thighs violently, they squat on their haunches and glare at each other. Osaka, having apparently forgotten something, goes back to his corner and has another mouthful of water, after which he comes back and calmly contemplates Kobe, who by this time discovers that he requires some liquid refreshment and accordingly goes and gets it. At last Kobe and Osaka are in a position irresistibly reminding the casual spectator of a couple of gamecocks. After a deal of slapping of thighs Kobe bounds up and makes a grab at Osaka, whom he misses by something less than a mile. Osaka returns the compliment and manages to get Kobe in a close embrace. They sway for a minute. There is a shock like a small earthquake, and the Lilliputian gentleman with the gauze wings, having received his cue from the umpire, points his fan at Osaka, who bows cumbrously and retires, as does Kobe, but less ostentatiously. It is not particularly exciting, except perhaps to those who can appreciate the nuances of Kiyobayashi's code, but it is very quaint and one of the few bits of old Japan that have not been hustled out of existence.—London Realm.

A Fearful Situation.

"Chawles," said Willie Wibbles, "I shall nevah again make fun of melodwamas."

"Why not?"

"Those stwuggles between devotion and duty sometimes happen in weal life. You know how the girl wants to marwy a young man who disagwees with her father on politics and goes to war on the other side?"

"Yes—everybody knows her."

"Don't make sport of her—deah boy—don't do it. Suppose this country were to have a war with England. Which would I do, wave the Amewican flag and whistle 'Yankee Doodle' or woll up my pantaloons and sing 'Wule Britannia?'"—Washington Star.

A Difficult Requirement.

The curious effect that may be produced by a very small transposition of words and ideas is illustrated by this slightly "mixed" instruction, recently given by an officer at drill to a company of men:

"When I give the command, 'Halt!' you will bring the foot which is on the ground to the side of the one which is in the air and remain motionless!"—Youth's Companion.

Caught the Idea.

Prima Donna—The Morning Dash says my acting is suggestive of the timbre of my voice. What does that mean?

Contralto (viciously)—It means you're a stick.—New York Weekly.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of five hundred and eighty seven dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice, upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Mary A. Hens as Weed Destroyers.

If a hen and chicks are placed in a yard or confined on a small plot, every blade of grass, as well as every weed, will be destroyed, and in a few days the plot will be as clean as if burned over. When hens are confined in yards the yards are clean and bare of vegetation. When the hens are on a range, they also destroy thousands of young weeds, which is not so noticeable, but which is nevertheless the case.—Exchange.

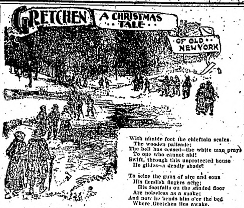
N. W. N. U. No. 51—1895.



All peaceful in New Amsterdam,
 Save that a piping breeze,
Born in the dreary Harlaem wastes,
 Rattles the wintry trees;
And Broadway holds a drift of snow
 That reaches to the knees.

'Tis Christmas eve; the chapel bell
 From gun-girt fort resounds,
And from the sombre northern woods
 Its solemn voice rebounds,
Commingled with the mournful cry
 Of supplicating hounds.

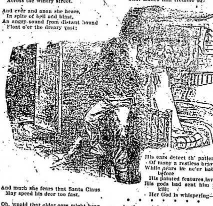
And now the sturdy Hollanders,
 All earthly things forgot,
Are seen upon the heavy road
 In many a little knot,
Wending their way to kneel and pray
 Within the holy spot.

The honest burghers dread no ill
 To children, kine or sheep;
The tomahawk on yonder hill
 Lies buried very deep;
The pipe of peace has touched their lips,
 And War has gone to sleep.

So, while the vrouw in ingle nook
 Turns o'er her Bible leaves,
And holly boughs in gay festoons
 The busy daughter weaves,
Unbolted is the friendly door
 On this most blest of even.

Each little rosy face up stairs
 Is still in slumber sweet,
Save one, whom pity keeps awake;
 Her pulses quickly beat
The while she thinks of the sick child
 Across the wintry street.

And ever and anon she hears,
 In spite of bell and blast,
An angry sound from distant hound
 Float o'er the dreary vast;

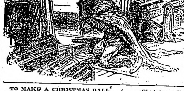


And much she fears that Santa Claus
 May speed his deer too fast.

Oh, would that older ears might hear
 What faithful dog would tell!
There crouch within the forest gloom,
 Where darkest shadows dwell,
A hundred painted savages!
 A hundred hearts of hell!

And one who knows not pity's voice
 Their cruel steps doth lead;
Of old and young, he'll still each tongue
 That speaks the white man's creed.
The gods of wood to which he bows
 Have bid him do the deed!

From some bold trader has he heard
 The story of the Child;
Of Christmas gifts, of Christmas joys,
 Peace and forgiveness, mild;
And Cradle, Crown of Thorns and Cross
 His savage heart reviled.



With nimble foot the chieftain scales
 The wooden palisade;
The bell has ceased—the white man prays
 To one who cannot aid!
Swift, through this unprotected house
 He glides—a deadly shade!

To seize the guns of sire and sons
 His fiendish fingers ache;
His footfalls on the sanded floor
 Are noiseless as a snake;
And now he bends him o'er the bed
 Where Gretchen lies awake.

A stifled cry comes from his lips,
 The murderous axe upflies;
One shriek of fright upon the night
 May foil their enterprise.
What careth he for yellow curls
 And pretty baby eyes?

But ere the brutal blade descends
 Upon the little maid
Her arms are flung about his neck,
 Her lips to his have strayed,
And thus she cries, "Dear Santa Claus,
 I'm not a bit afraid!

"I'm glad you came, you kind old thing,
 Before to sleep I fell.
Please take my toys across the street
 To little Isabel,
For she's so very, very ill
 And I'm so very well.

"Her sick room you will know at once,
 The rushlight you will see;
Her cough, poor dear, you'll plainly hear
 Much worse it cannot be;
Give her the toys—but please don't say
 You brought them first to me."

The savage understands full well
 The words of pitying woe;
His heart beats wildly; now he stands
 Once more upon the snow.
What does this strange sensation mean
 That makes him tremble so?

His ears detect th' patient hum
 Of many a restless brave,
While tears he ne'er had known before
 His painted features lave;
His gods had sent him forth to kill;
 Her God is whispering—"Save!"

• • • • • • •

As the good dominie descants
 On the Commandments ten,
A mighty arm flings open wide
 The massive door, and then
They see a fur clad chief, who cries,
 "Your guns, ye Christian men!"

Well know they what the warning means!
 Out in the storm they pour,
Father and son, and lover, too,
 A lion-hearted score;
And each unto his cottage flies
 To barricade his door.

No need—the foemen dread the gun,
 And as they flee in fear
Their leader at the altar kneels
 And hears the words, sincere,
"Oh, God, I thank Thee that Thy love
 May enter—even here!"

TO MAKE A CHRISTMAS BALL.

Instructions That May Aid a Perplexed Gift-Giver.

A Christmas ball is a pretty trifle to give an absent friend. The heart of the ball may be some pretty little gift; a gold thimble, an emery ball, a silver spool or something of that nature. Around this silk floss or zephyr is wound with a quotation appropriate to the person for whom the ball is intended, put in and covered with the floss or zephyr.

These quotations may be taken from a favorite author of the giver, or of the one who receives the present, or they may be made personal in character, as:

"She was a phantom of delight
 When first she beamed upon my sight."

Or use this:

"Her eyes as stars of twilight fair;
 Like twilight, too, her dusky hair."

When the ball has been made the desired size a handsome pair of scissors, a gold bodkin, a beautiful needle case or any gift the donor fancies may be attached to the end of the thread.

As the ball is unwound in embroidering, knitting or crocheting, as the case may be, the quotations come to light, unexpectedly and give pleasure long after Christmas day has passed into the shadows of memory; while the heart of the ball adds the final bit of pleasure when the last thread is unwound.

Received Some Himself.

"Have a cigar, Charley?"

"Don't care if I do."

"Some that my wife gave me for a Christmas present."

"Er, come to think of it, Tom, I guess I don't feel like smoking to-day."

Christmas Day Thoughts.

Santa Claus is a curious old gentleman. He will not enter a chimney unless it soots him.

Think not of mundane things on Christmas day. Put off your bills until after New Year's.

Do not seek for silence on Christmas day. Remember that even in poetry Christmas inspires such rhymes as boys, toys and noise.

That it is better to give than to receive is proved by the fact that the custom of giving at Christmas has outlived the custom of receiving at New Year's.

Utility should not always be the guiding factor in the selection of a gift. A ton of coal is always useful, but hardly appropriate to send to your best girl.

A wise husband will not leave it to Santa Claus to bring such articles as sealskin sacques and fur boas into the house unless he wishes to try his wife's faith in the great deity of the chimney.

Ordinarily, reading maketh a full man, but etiquette does not stand in the way of one's getting full on turkey on Christmas day. Turkey, though intoxicating in its way, is a mild enough beverage and may be indulged in even by the Prohibitionists.

There are some people who would be dissatisfied on Christmas morning if Santa Claus had dropped the earth into their stockings the night before. Fortunately, their number must always be limited, because very few people wear stockings sufficiently large to accommodate so extensive a present.

A RACY EXPLANATION.

The Plan of the Merritts as Told on the Witness Stand.

Some surprise has been manifested that Mr. J. D. Rockefeller, with his great wealth and multitude of business affairs, should have engaged in iron mining in Minnesota, and an effort has been made to create the impression that he embarked in the enterprise for the purpose of plucking the Merritts of Duluth. The testimony of A. D. Thompson of Duluth, given in the Merritt suit, throws some light on the matter. Here is one answer to a question which Mr. Thompson gave on the witness stand:

"Mr. Leonidas Merritt, at the Metropole hotel (New York), at the dinner table one evening told me plain, clear, decisive, that he and C. W. Wetmore were trying to get John D. Rockefeller in by degrees into this thing, $5,000 to-day, $10,000 to-morrow—as much as they could get every day, and lead him along by degrees until some day he would wake up and find that he was in so deep that he would have to go in and save the corporation and everybody connected with it. That is what Mr. Leonidas Merritt told me at the Metropole hotel."

It was fortunate for Minnesota that the Merritts were able to secure the capital necessary to develop the mines, and there seems to be no occasion to condemn the man who came to the rescue at so critical a period.

Feeding Potatoes.

According to our best authorities on the subject of feeds, potatoes are worth about one-fourth as much as corn for most kinds of stock. For hogs and poultry they should be cooked, but for other stock they may be fed raw to good advantage. They should be fed with other kinds of feed so as to get the best results, and if they do not sell they can be fed and other valuable stuff held over that will bring in some money another season.

Catarrh Can Not Be Cured

With local applications as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

Stayed Indoors for Fourteen Year

Talk about a woman's will. Why, up in Lansing resides a lady who has enjoyed good health and yet has not been outside the door-yard for fourteen years. On one occasion, when she returned home too late to get supper for her husband, he grumbled and said that he hoped the next time she went out she would break her leg. This led the woman to declare she would never again go outside the yard. Later, when the husband died, of remorse, probably, she followed the casket to the gate and refused to go further, and from that time has never left the premises.—Kalamazoo Gazette.

Disastrous Failure.

We can mention no failure more disastrous than that of physical energy. It involves the partial suspension of the digestive and assimilative processes, and entails the retirement from business of the liver and kidneys. Only through the good offices of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters can the restoration of its former vigorous status be hoped for. When this aid has been secured, a resumption of activity in the stomach, liver and bowels may be relied upon. The Bitters conquers malaria and kidney troubles.

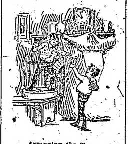
TWO BRIGHT BOYS.

They Lay a Deep Plot to Capture Santa Claus.

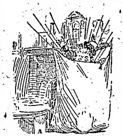
Last night was bleak and dark and drear,
And the merry old saint had left his deer;
Obliged to harness a mule to a cart,
Saying, "I'll make it with an early start."
So he started out on his yearly round
With a list of places where children abound.
His load was heavy and he missed the snow,
Which formerly brightened the ruddy glow

Of his face—but he thought, and smiled,
That his mission was sacred to many a child,
So he chirked to the mule and rattled his toys,
And sang of his love for girls and boys.



Arranging the Trap.

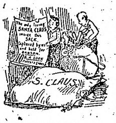
But Tommy and Dick had it in for Nick
And conspired to play him a dirty trick,
Forgetting the work the saint had done,
In the many years since his task begun.
Says Tommy, "I'm tired of lying still
And letting old Santa my stockings fill
With things that I don't want at all;
Let's capture St. Nicholas, toys and all."
They danced with glee and then to the door
Of papa's room, whence a sonorous snore
Told them at once that the coast was clear,
Then to the parlor, and in the firelight there
Were hanging the stockings, empty as though
There was no saint with gifts to bestow.
And then for an hour the sprites that stare



Santa Claus Strikes the Album.

From the glowing coals did nought but glare.
At two of the busiest boys on earth
Who, with stifled laughter and quiet mirth,
Arranged the details of a villainous plan,
For bagging the little, brisk old man.
A gunny sack, capacious and strong,
With nails they spiked the mantel along;
Its mouth was stretched by aid of a stick,
And all made ready to catch Saint Nick.
And to be dead sure they added a charm
In the shape of a livery burglar alarm,
Then to the corners, each behind a chair,
Tom and Dick went and waited there.

And all unmindful of his coming fate
The saint puffed along, the hour was late.



The only living SANTA CLAUS inside this SACK. Captured by us and held for RANSOM.
S. CLAUS

The Boys Capture Santa Claus.

He was making his way to every home,
Climbing down chimney with never a groan;
Though his work was hard, it was gladsome toil,
And he cared not a snap for the clothes he'd soil.

Thus it was with the saint and at last he got
To the place where he was down for another lot,
Where Tommy and Dick had the bag prepared,
All was ready and Saint Nick was snared.

With a rush he descended the chimney black,
And into the sack he went ker-smack.
Then Tommy with padlock and Dick with key,
Made fast their prize with boyish glee,
And reveled in toys, for Santa's stock
Fell into their hands—and they made mock
Of the prayers of Nick from within the sack,
As he begged to be given his liberty back.

L'Envoi.

To-morrow old Santa will sit on a chair
In a dime museum, and people will stare
At a real live saint too mad to speak,
And Tommy and Dick draw a hundred a week.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

WHEN SHERMAN WAS A BOY.

A Youthful Prank Recalled by Him After Gaining Fame.

Among my school adventures at Mount Vernon was one I heartily regret. We had a teacher by the name of Lord. He was a small man, and not able to cope with several of the boys of the school. We called him "Bunty Lord." One evening after school four boys, of whom I was one, while playing on the commons, found a dead sheep.

It was suggested that we carry the sheep into the schoolroom and place it on Lord's seat. This was promptly done, and I wrote a Latin couplet, purporting that this was a very worthy sacrifice to a very poor Lord, and placed it on the head of the sheep. The next morning Lord found the sheep and made a great outcry against the indignity. Efforts were at once made to ascertain the actors in this farce, and proof was soon obtained. My handwriting disclosed my part in the case, and the result was a prompt discharge of the culprits from school, but poor Lord lost his place because of his manifest inability to govern his unruly pupils.—Memoirs of Senator Sherman.

The Cause of It.

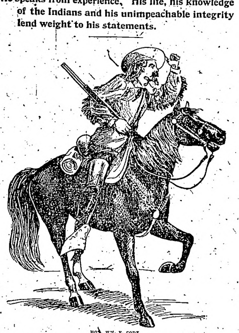
"Just think how unhappy the little savages must be," said a Sunday school teacher, trying to point a moral. "They have no Christmas at all. Can any of you tell me why?"

"It's because they haven't any stockings to wear," chipped in little Johnny.

BUFFALO BILL.

A NOTED MAN'S OPINION ON A SUBJECT OF VITAL IMPORTANCE.

He speaks from experience. His life, his knowledge of the Indians and his unimpeachable integrity lend weight to his statements.



HON. WM. F. CODY.

If there is a man in America to-day, whose opinion of that which has to do with the Indians and their habits is of value, it is that of the Hon. Wm. F. Cody (Buffalo Bill). The years of his life spent with them as a government scout and his later life of success, combined with the respect and admiration felt for him by the entire world, make his words an unquestionable authority, on any thing to do with this subject.

When such a man as this, in times of sickness resorts to medicines and obtains relief by their use, that are of nature's own brewing, made by nature's own children—the Indian—from her all powerful roots, barks and herbs, as they themselves gather them, it would seem that the example he thus gives to the world should be followed and profited by.

Note what he says in his own words concerning the wonderful results to be obtained by the famous Kickapoo Indian Sagwa:—"I have known of its virtue for a long time, and on the frontier this and the other Kickapoo Indian remedies are considered indispensible. I had occasion to use Kickapoo Indian Sagwa for malaria and chills with the best of results, it is far superior to quinine. I have also used Sagwa and Kickapoo Indian Oil for rheumatism and was speedily cured. You may use my name and say that for what they claim to do, the Kickapoo Indian Remedies have no equal." Sufferers from these troubles, or in fact from any derangement caused by a disordered condition of the kidneys, liver, stomach or blood, follow this illustrious man's example, get well by a sure method. Where a cure is possible, a cure is certain and that too without danger, as these medicines contain no mineral or other poisonous ingredients. All druggists sell them. Kickapoo Indian Sagwa $1 a bottle, 6 bottles for $5. Kickapoo Indian Oil, 25c., Salve, 25c., Worm Killer, 25c., Cough Cure, 50c., Pills, 25c.

Nursery Needlework.

This is to be done for, and not by, the denizens of the nursery. It consists of crawling rugs and picture tablecloths, either of which is calculated to make the tots wild with delight. The former are made from a square of dark cloth of flannel, lined to give it body, after working upon it with red crewels the most fascinating pictures from Mother Goose. Any nursery book will furnish you with the designs, although you can have them stamped if you prefer, and the stitch is simply outline or cable.

For a table cloth use either a white damask with scarlet Roman floss, or if a colored cloth is preferred, any of the art serges, but red is the best color for the embroidery, as it attracts by its brightness. Never repeat the same picture. If Jack Horner sits in one corner with his famous pie Tommy Tucker can sing for his white bread and butter in another, and Simple Simon fish for a whale in the third. It is good "catch up" work for busy mothers.—New York Herald.

Christmas Trees.

As the time has arrived when these trees are to be found well decorated in every country house, it may be interesting to note that perhaps the first appearance of them in England was in 1829, when, according to the account given by the late Mr. Charles Greville in his "Memoirs," at Pansanger on Christmas day in that year:

"The Princess Lieven got up a little fete such as is customary all over Germany. Three trees in great pots were put upon a long table covered with pink linen; each tree was illuminated with three circular tiers of colored wax candles—blue, green and white. Before each tree was displayed a quantity of toys, gloves, pocket-handkerchiefs, work boxes, books and various articles—presents made to the owner of the tree. It was very pretty. Here it was only for the children; in Germany the custom extends to persons of all ages."

I believe it is generally supposed that the Prince Consort "first brought the custom in," to the detriment of our national twelfth cake and Twelfth Night celebrations; but it would seem that Christmas trees were before his time in England.—J. Standish Haly, in Notes and Queries.

Origin of Christmas Greens.

The custom of decorating churches and houses with evergreens, branches and flowers is of very early date. The Jews used them at their feast of tabernacles and the heathens in several of their ceremonies, and they were adopted by the Christians. Christ permitted branches to be used as a token of rejoicing upon his triumphant entry into Jerusalem; it was natural, therefore, that at Christmas time, when his birth was celebrated, this symbol of rejoicing should be resorted to. Some of the early councils, however, considering that the practice somewhat savored of paganism, endeavored to abolish it, and at one time it was enacted that it was not lawful to begirt or adorn houses with laurel or green boughs.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND TAKES ISSUE WITH SALISBURY.

He Sends a Special Message to Congress in Which He Says That the Principle of the Monroe Doctrine Must Be Maintained Even at the Cost of a Set-To With Our English Cousins.

Washington, Dec. 19.—The president sent to congress the answer of Lord Salisbury, prime minister of Great Britain, to Secretary Olney's note on the Venezuelan boundary dispute. In connection with this he submitted a special message on the Monroe doctrine. This message is a document which will doubtless become one of the historic state papers centering around the famous pronunciamento of President Monroe. The message of the president is as follows:

In my annual message addressed to the congress on the third instant, I called attention to the pending boundary controversy between Great Britain and the Republic of Venezuela, and recited the substance of a representation made by this government to her Britannic majesty's government, suggesting reasons why such dispute should be submitted to arbitration for settlement and inquiring whether it would be so submitted.

The answer of the British government, which was then awaited, has since been received, and, together with the dispatch to which it is a reply, is hereto appended. Such reply is embodied in two communications addressed by the British prime minister to Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British ambassador at this capital. It will be seen that one of these communications is devoted exclusively to observations upon the Monroe doctrine, and claims that in the present instance a new and strange extension and development of this doctrine is insisted on by the United States; that the reasons justifying an appeal to the doctrine enunciated by President Monroe are generally inapplicable "to the state of things in which we live at the present day," and especially inapplicable to a controversy involving the boundary line between Great Britain and Venezuela.

Without attempting extended argument in reply to these positions, it may not be amiss to suggest that the doctrine upon which we stand is strong and sound, because its enforcement is important to our peace and safety as a nation, and is essential to the integrity of our free institutions and the tranquil maintenance of our distinctive form of government. It was intended to apply to every stage of our national life and cannot become obsolete while our republic endures. If the balance of power is justly a cause for jealous anxiety among the governments of the old world, and a subject for our absolute non-interference, none the less is an observance of of vital concern to our people and their government. Assuming, therefore, that we may properly insist upon this doctrine, without regard to "the state of things in which we live" or any changed conditions here or elsewhere, it is not apparent why its application may not be invoked in the present controversy. If a European power, by an extension of its boundaries, takes possession of the territory of one of our neighboring republics against its will and in derogation of its rights, it is difficult to see why, to that extent, such European power does not thereby attempt to extend its system of government to that portion of this continent which is thus taken. This is the precise action which President Monroe declared to be "dangerous to our peace and safety," and it can make no difference whether the European system is extended by an advance of frontier or otherwise.

It is also suggested in the British reply that we should not seek to apply the Monroe doctrine to the pending dispute because it does not embody any principle of international law, which "is founded on the general consent of nations," and that "no statesman, however eminent, and no nation, however powerful, are competent to insert into the code of international law a novel principle, which was never recognized before and which has not since been accepted by the government of any other country."

Practically, the principle for which we contend has peculiar, if not exclusive, relation to the United States. It may not have been admitted in so many words to the code of international law, but since in international councils every nation is entitled to the rights belonging to it, if the enforcement of the Monroe doctrine is something we may justly claim, it has its place in the code of international law as certainly and as securely as if it were specifically mentioned, and when the United States is a suitor before the high tribunal that administers international law, the question to be determined is whether or not we present claims which the justice of that code of law can find to be right and valid. The Monroe doctrine finds its recognition in those principles of international law which are based upon the theory that every nation and its just claims enforced. Of course this government is entirely confident that under the sanction of this doctrine we have clear rights and undoubted claims, nor is this ignored in the British reply. The prime minister, while not admitting that the Monroe doctrine is applicable to present conditions, states:

Shall Have Its Rights Protected

"In declaring that the United States would resist any such enterprise if it was contemplated, President Monroe adopted a policy which received the entire sympathy of the English government of that date." He further declares: "Though the language of President Monroe is directed to the attainment of objects which most Englishmen would agree to be salutary, it is impossible to admit that they have been inscribed by any adequate authority in the code of international law." Again he says: "They (her majesty's government) fully concur with the view which President Monroe apparently entertained that any disturbance of the existing territorial distribution in that hemisphere by any fresh acquisitions on the part of any European state would be a highly inexpedient change."

In the belief that the doctrine for which we contend was clear and definite, that it was founded upon substantial considerations and involved our safety and welfare; that it was fully applicable to our present conditions, and to the state of the world's progress, and that it was directly related to the pending controversy and without any conviction as to the final merits of the dispute, but anxious to learn in a satisfactory and conclusive manner whether Great Britain sought under a claim of boundary to extend her possessions on this continent without right, or whether she merely sought possession of territory fairly included within her lines of ownership, this government proposed to the government of Great Britain a resort to arbitration as the proper means of settling the question, to the end that a vexatious boundary dispute between the two contestants might be determined and our exact standing and relation in respect to the controversy might be made clear. It will be seen from the correspondence herewith submitted that this proposition has been declined by the British government, upon grounds which under the circumstances seem to me to be far from satisfactory. It is deeply disappointing that such an appeal, actuated by the most friendly feelings towards both nations directly concerned, addressed to the sense of justice and to the magnanimity of one of the great powers of the world, and touching its relations to one comparatively weak and small, should have produced no better results.

The Course to Be Pursued

by this government, in view of the present condition, does not appear to admit of serious doubt. Having labored faithfully for many years to induce Great Britain to submit this dispute to impartial arbitration, and having been now finally apprised of her refusal to do so, nothing remains but to accept the situation, to recognize its plain requirements and deal with it accordingly. Great Britain's present proposition has never thus far been regarded as admissible by Venezuela, though any adjustment of the boundary which that country may deem for her advantage and may enter into of her own free will, cannot, of course, be objected to by the United States.

Assuming, however, that the attitude of Venezuela will remain unchanged, the dispute has reached such a stage as to make it now incumbent upon the United States to take measures to determine with sufficient certainty for its justification what is the true divisional line between the Republic of Venezuela and British Guiana. The inquiry to that end should, of course, be conducted carefully and judicially, and due weight should be given to all available evidence, records and facts in support of the claims of both parties.

In order that such an examination should be prosecuted in a thorough and satisfactory manner, I suggest that the congress make an adequate appropriation for the expenses of a commission to be appointed by the executive who shall make the necessary investigation and report upon the matter with the least possible delay. When such report is made and accepted, it will in my opinion be the duty of the United States to resist by every means in its power, as a willful aggression upon its rights and interests, the appropriation by Great Britain of any lands or the exercise of governmental jurisdiction over any territory, which after investigation, we have determined of right belongs to Venezuela.

In making these recommendations, I am fully alive to the responsibility incurred and keenly realize all the consequences that may follow. I am nevertheless firm in my conviction that while it is a grievous thing to contemplate the two great English-speaking peoples of the world as being otherwise than friendly competitors in the onward march of civilization and strenuous and worthy rivals in all the arts of peace, there is no calamity which a great nation can invite which equals that which follows a supine submission to wrong and injustice, and the consequent loss of national self-respect and honor beneath which is shielded and defended a people's safety and greatness. —Grover Cleveland.

Executive Mansion, Dec. 17, 1895.

The Correspondence.

Accompanying the president's message on the Venezuelan affair and on the Monroe doctrine is the entire correspondence on these subjects. It starts with Secretary Olney's now celebrated note reopening the negotiations with Great Britain, looking to the arbitration of the boundary dispute. It bears date of July 20, last, and is addressed to Mr. Bayard. The secretary begins by stating that the president has given much anxious thought to the subject and has not reached a conclusion without a lively sense of its great importance as well as of the serious possibility involved in any action now to be taken. He then outlines the Monroe doctrine, and shows that it is meant as a protection to the United States against the encroachment of European nations.

Lord Salisbury answers Secretary Olney in two notes, both of the date of July 26. The first is devoted entirely to a reply to that portion of the note relating to the Monroe doctrine, which, he says, has never before been made the subject of a written communication by the United States to another government, although it has largely influenced American foreign relations.

Lord Salisbury says that this doctrine has undergone a "notable development" since its enunciation by President Monroe, which had originally received the entire sympathy of the English government, and England now refuses to recognize it.

IT IS ENDORSED.

President Cleveland's Message Arouses Enthusiasm.

Washington, Dec. 19.—The message of President Cleveland to congress transmitting the correspondence between Secretary Olney and Lord Salisbury relative to the Venezuelan boundary dispute created a real sensation in Washington.

Although the nature of Secretary Olney's vigorous communication and of Lord Salisbury's answer had been already accurately foretold in the Associated Press dispatches from Washington and London, there was still a great popular craving to learn just how the president would deal with Lord Salisbury's refusal to submit the matter to arbitration, and the message was listened to with intense interest in congress, and was read with avidity on the streets. Nowhere was there a voice lifted in dissent from the doctrine so firmly laid down by the president, but on the contrary, there was an outburst of patriotic feeling that must have been highly gratifying to the chief executive. In the dignified United States senate, a body that rarely exhibits emotion on any occasion, there was witnessed the unparalleled spectacle of hand-clapping and applause, which was the spontaneous expression of the approval of almost every senator, without regard to party. On the streets the message was discussed and old veterans of the late war talked of what they were prepared again to undertake at the call of their country. In the great hall of the pension building the employes gathered and sang with gusto the "Star Spangled Banner" and "My Country 'Tis of Thee."

At the White House messages poured in from every quarter of the country, congratulating the president upon his message.

Davis Is Pleased.

Senator Davis of Minnesota, a member of the committee on foreign relations, said: "I think the president has risen to an opportunity such as has not been presented to any president in many years. In language of great dignity, power and accuracy he has stated the Monroe doctrine as understood by the American people for seventy years."

Senator Teller (Rep.)—The concluding words have an American ring.

Senator Gorman (Dem.)—It is a warlike document; a very vigorous statement. Of course much depends upon what the commission which we are to send to Venezuela shall report.

Endorsed by McKinley.

Columbus, Ohio, Dec. 19.—Gov. McKinley, having been requested by a number of newspapers by wire to express his views on the president's message on the Venezuelan question, has responded as follows:

"Replying to your dispatch touching President Cleveland's message it is my judgment that the president's firm and dignified statement of the adherence of our government to the Monroe doctrine will command the approval of the people of Ohio. His message enforces with strength and vigor the position of the United States in its relations with the European powers for more than seventy years. It is American in letter and spirit, and in a calm and dispassionate manner upholds the honor of the nation and insures its security."

Discussed by London Papers.

London, Dec. 19.—All of the morning papers to-morrow will devote more or less of their editorial space to a discussion of President Cleveland's message, on the Venezuelan question and the merits of that question itself.

The Daily Telegraph (Liberal) will publish an editorial contending that America has no concern in the Venezuelan dispute.

The Daily Graphic says: "The epitaph of the Monroe doctrine has been written in the Venezuelan correspondence. President Cleveland's message is a document which self-respecting Americans will not read with either pride or pleasure."

The Standard, Conservative organ: "The position President Cleveland assumes is preposterous. No American citizen would for a moment dream of admitting its soundness in any analogous case in which the honor and interests of America were concerned. There can be but one answer. We decline to humiliate ourselves and we refuse to accept the decision of Washington in matters altogether outside of its jurisdiction."

HE WAS A DEVIL.

HARRY HAYWARD'S CONFESSION IS MADE PUBLIC.

Previous to the Murder of Miss Ging He Had Killed a Chinaman, a White Girl and a Man—Details of the Plot to Kill Miss Ging for Her Insurance Money—He Hypnotized Blixt.

Minneapolis, Dec. 21.—The confession of Harry Hayward, which was dictated to a stenographer for several days and up to within a few hours of his execution, has been made public. It makes a book of about fifty thousand words. He began by relating his boyhood experiences, which were commonplace. He told of his first gambling experiences and said that he had played in about every city in the union and in Alaska, Mexico and Cuba. He then continued:

"I never had any very great trouble, until I had been gambling for some time. I met with desperate characters, and soon got reckless. I got in with a gang of counterfeiters about seven years ago, and have dealt in that money ever since. I do not intend to give them away, for there is honor, you know, among thieves. I never spent much of the stuff; it was too risky, but I used it for flash rolls and in working schemes with. I remember when the first time came to me when I got mad enough to kill. It was in St. Louis, and I was out for a ride, and the horse acted bad and made me mad. So I killed him. I never got into any trouble for that; I just paid for him, and that settled it. Let me see. When was the next thing of interest?

Three Murders.

"It was somewhere in the later part of 1893. No, that's not the first. The first was out in Chinatown, in San Francisco. I was playing with a Chinaman for small stakes, and the Celestial was cheating me. I jumped up and told him I had found him out, and he came at me with a knife. I pulled the heavy chair from under me, but I couldn't get a good swing to strike him, so I poked the leg at him, and struck him in the face. He fell, and then I punched the leg into his eye, and it crushed right into the skull and he lay still. I told some of this to Blixt, but I added to it and lied to him to make it worse. After that I dug a hole in the place, under the floor in the shed, broke up the chair, and buried it with the body there. I never had any trouble from it, although the papers made a report of the finding of the body. That was about July or Aug. 24, 1893.

"After beginning I rather liked the excitement. Then luck followed me, and I went from there to Passadena. I had formed the acquaintance of a lively girl, a regular adventuress, one of these girls who never live at one place long, and change boarding places continually, because they are found out if they stay too long in one. I was a little pressed for money, and she had saved $500. I had her pat, but I couldn't get the money except by pretending I had an investment for her that was a money-maker. She turned over the money, and I took her out riding, shot her and buried the body. She was not very well known and was never missed. I never heard of that matter from that day to this.

"Then the last trouble before this was at El Paso del Norte, I was mixed up with a girl there, and we used to paint things once in a while. One night her brother caught us together in my room and had us dead to rights. He was crazy, and came at me with a knife. I tried to beat him off with a chair, and the girl cried to me to shoot him, or he would kill me, and she would be found out. I fired on him, and struck him in the shoulder, and he dropped the knife, and the girl jumped out of bed and picked it up. He was quiet enough after that, and I took him to a drug store and had his wound dressed. He gave a story of how it happened to ward off suspicion, I promised to marry the girl, and all was well for the time. I left there and learned afterward that he died from blood poisoning from the wound."

Miss Ging's Murder.

He then told of his relation with Miss Ging and how he had got her to insure her life and make out the policies to him. He then continued:

"Well, this done, came the part of getting her out of the way, and there Blixt came in. I hypnotized him all right, but, of course, no court would recognize that. When I used to talk to him he would say everything I said. For instance, I said to him, 'Blixt, what do you think of that girl up stairs, that dressmaker?' and he would say, 'What do you think of her?' 'I think she ought to be out in the grave yard,' I would answer, and he would say, 'I think she ought to be out in the grave yard.' I worked him up by talking crime to him, until he was more crazy for blood than I was. He wanted to get at her at once after the night came when he was to do the deed. Most of the things he told were truths, but he lied considerably to ease himself off. At the same time I had him hypnotized, and he was crazy to do my bidding. All that about my forcing whisky on him is a lie. He asked for it to brace his nerves, and I brought him two bottles.

"Matters were getting interesting, and I was beginning to be nervous. I had to arrange some scheme to get rid of the girl. Blixt suggested starting up the elevator with her and making it an accident. He lied and said I did, but I was afraid that she might not be quite dead, and if she could speak she might be suspicious. Then I worked a new dodge, and told her that I was in with a gang of counterfeiters.

"'This man Blixt,' I said, 'he is not really an engineer. He is one of the gang, and he does that work for a disguise. It is very good money, and no one can tell it, for there are several government officials in with it.'

Working on Blixt.

"All this time I was working Blixt up to assist me in the work, but up to that time had only made him agree to take the body after I had performed the balance. He was to meet me out there and take her from me and dispose of her, and he did go out for that purpose once, but I did not show up. On Saturday night I was ready to do the work. I had him cut the T rail, but he was mistaken in dates on that matter. My father was right. It was bought some time before, and had been lying about the place for some time. He cut the rail, and on Sunday night I met Kate out on First avenue north, with the rail under my coat. She stopped for me, and then we drove out to Lake street and out to Lake Calhoun. It was my purpose to smash her with the rail and then make the horse bump the buggy on a corner and have her thrown out, but I could not find a proper place again, and so I let that go. When we were out on the road, near the house I spoke of before, I dropped the T rail out, and she heard it. She wanted to know what that was and I told her it was a whiffle tree that I had thrown out for a marker, and that it was to be a signal, and when we came back I could tell if it was all right for the money that night. Of course it was not all right, and so I told Blixt I could not get a chance, and I worked him up to do it the next night.

"The last time I saw her that Monday was at 11 o'clock in the morning, when I made the appointment to meet her. I did not see her again until I left her with Blixt. That other man business and the note to her that afternoon was something else that I don't know anything about. I told her then that I would be sure to get the money that night, but that we must be cautious. We must not be seen together going out, and that she must not question Blixt going out. It was a rule of the gang that none of them working a deal. She agreed, and everything was arranged.

Fixing His Alibi.

"I had lots of places to cover, and I had to be seen about the flats as much as possible. I was everywhere, and all the people there fixed the time about right. It was about 7:15 when I ran over to First avenue north and met Kate. We drove a little way up, and I told her where to meet me. Then I hurried back to the flat, running from Lyndale across to Hennepin. I don't think the witness Jenks saw me, for he was fully twenty minutes off in his time, although I was at that point at that time that evening, in front of the sign. Wilson was fully that amount off in his time also, and I think he was mistaken, for I don't remember meeting a rig. Well, I hurried back and set Blixt off, ran up stairs a minute to help the alibi, then went after Blixt. After I met him we walked together a little way, and he was so bloodthirsty that he wanted to turn the buggy upside down and rip open the horse. I told him that would not do, because he would need the horse to get away. Then he went to the buggy just as he said, but he lied some.

"I never spoke to him of 'green goods,' so I don't see how he could have heard that, and I am sure she did not. He took that from a cue of the state, and the nitro-glycerine and the rest, with that threatening his wife, was his attorney's work in fixing up his case. Well, I left them and the rest we must believe Blixt for as far as the killing goes. He carried out my instructions about the revolver and changing the bullets and cleaning the gun. The bullets he used had been filed down so that they would weigh, I thought, about the same as a thirty-two, while my gun was a thirty-eight. Then I went over to Bartelson's to make my alibi good. They are all off on the time, and here is the explanation. It was not three minutes either way when I left Blixt and Kate, from twenty minutes to 8 o'clock. Now, Bartelson's clock was 15 minutes slow according to my time, and I did not really arrive there until 11 minutes after 8, while his clock said four minutes of 8, and when I looked at my watch I pretended mine was the same time. This gave me 35 minutes to make the Bartelson residence, so plenty of time to present myself again at the Ozark and fix my alibi. This is the time testified to by my mother.

"Then I hurried to Bartelson's, and we did not arrive at the theater until the first act was nearly over. This will account for the discrepancy in time which puzzled the state. It also gave Blixt about the right time to drive to the lake and do the work at the time he testified to. Had he started later he could not have done it.

At First He Was Scared.

"That night the first I heard was that there had been a runaway accident, and I was never so scared in my life. I was afraid she was not dead and would talk. You may believe it was a relief when I heard she was dead. I pretended to be agitated about the loss of my money all the time, which accounted for my excitement. The rest of the case is history which you all know. I think the best piece of nerve I ever showed was when they took me to the morgue to see the body, and with all their eyes on me I placed my hand on her and kept cool. Before I went I refused to go, because I was frightened for fear I would break down. I did not think I could stand it, and when I went there it was in fear that I would be lost. When I got there, though, I just thought of something else—played a faro bank in my mind—and it worked to perfection. I am proud of that piece of work.

"In regard to Adry, my brother, when I first thought of the scheme to do up the girl, I thought of Adry, for he had worked all right in some smaller deals, although he always kept within the pale of the law. That was all right about that scene in the office, which he told Stewart. That was when I dropped him. He was too white livered to suit me, and I had lost my power over him some way since he was married."

From this point on the confession is filled with personal reflections concerning the crime and his imprisonment. In the long jumble of words there were accusations against Ed. Stevens, Mike Quinlan and Mike Kierce, most of which have been made public. He admitted the plot to escape, however, and practically exonerates the sheriff's office from any overt act or wrong motive.

Commercial Day.

New York, Dec. 21.—Patriotic decorations and patriotic speeches were the order last night at the American commercial banquet given at Delmonico's. It was the centennial celebration of the Jay commercial treaty with Great Britain as well as the inauguration of the annual observance of "Coccemcial Day" by all organized commercial bodies. Many men of the world were present and over 300 guests were seated. Dr. Chauncey M. Depew presided.

DESERTED HIS WIFE.

A Redwood Falls Man Elopes With a St. Paul Woman.

Redwood Falls, Minn., Dec. 20.—F. I. Gleason, at one time city recorder of Redwood Falls and ex-deputy sheriff of Redwood county, and implicated in the alleged incendiarism of a residence and of the Park hotel, has deserted his wife and eloped with a fast young woman heretofore residing on University avenue, St. Paul. It is thought that the two have gone into the Northwest Territory. The desertion has brought from Mrs. Gleason sufficient evidence to send Gleason over the road in case he is arrested. It appears that a residence occupied by Gleason and owned by A. Brium, in this city, was fired by him, and that he was mixed up in the burning of the Park hotel, on which the London and Liverpool and Globe Insurance companies have refused to pay the insurance, although the fire occured nearly a year ago.

RUSHED BACK TO DEATH.

A Boy Perishes in an Attempt to Rescue His Baby Sister.

Britton, S. D., Dec. 20.—The farm house of Mrs. Rose Sayer, six miles south of town, was to-day destroyed by fire with all its contents. Three small children were in the house when the fire caught. The two elder made their escape, but the oldest boy, six years old, returned to rescue his baby sister, and he perished in the flames. The mother, who was at the barn at some distance from the house, reached the spot barely in time to snatch the baby from the burning building.

SPECIAL MESSAGE

AMERICA CAN HONESTLY PAY ITS PUBLIC OBLIGATIONS.

President Cleveland Impresses This Upon the Minds of Citizens—He Recommends, However, That the Financial Policy Be Changed—The Senate Passes the House Commission Bill—Panic on the New York Stock Market.

Washington, Dec. 22.—The following message was sent to congress by President Cleveland to-day:

To the Congress: In my last annual message the evils of our present financial system were plainly pointed out and the causes and means of the depletion of government gold were explained. It was therein stated that after all the efforts that had been made by the executive branch of the government to protect our gold reserve by the issuance of bonds, amounting to more than $162,000,000, such reserve then amounted to but little more than $79,000,000; that about $16,000,000 had been withdrawn from such reserve during the month next previous to the date of that message, and quite large withdrawals for shipment in the immediate future were predicted. The contingency then feared has reached us, and the withdrawal of gold since the communication referred to, and others that appear inevitable, threaten such a depletion in our government gold reserve as brings us face to face with the necessity of further action for its protection. This condition is intensified by the prevalence in certain quarters of sudden and unusual apprehension and timidity in business circles.

We are in the midst of another season of perplexity caused by our dangerous and fatuous financial operations. These may be expected to recur with certainty as long as there is no amendment in our financial system. If in this particular instance our predicament is at all influenced by a recent insistence upon the position we should occupy in our relation to certain questions concerning our foreign policy, this furnishes a signal and impressive warning that even the patriotic sentiment of our people is not an adequate substitute for a sound financial policy.

America Is Solvent.

Of course, there can be no doubt in any thoughtful mind as to the complete solvency of our nation, nor can there be any just apprehension that the American people will be satisfied with less than an honest payment of our public obligations in the recognized money of the world. We should not overlook the fact, however, that aroused fear is unreasoning, and must be taken into account in all efforts to avert public loss and the sacrifice of our people's interests.

The real and sensible cure for our recurring troubles can only be effected by a complete change in our financial scheme. Pending that the executive branch of the government will not relax its efforts nor abandon its determination to use every means within its reach to maintain before the world American credit, nor will there be any hesitation in exhibiting its confidence in the resources of our country and the constant patriotism of our people.

In view, however, of the peculiar situation now confronting us, I have ventured to herein express the earnest hope that the congress, in default of the inauguration of a better system of finance, will not take a recess from its labors before it has, by legislative enactment or declaration, done something not only to remind those apprehensive among our people that the resources of this government and a scrupulous regard for honest dealing afford a sure guarantee of unquestioned safety and soundness, but to reassure the world that with these factors and the patriotism of our citizens the ability and determination of our nation to meet in any circumstances every obligation it incurs do not admit of question.

I ask at the hands of congress such prompt aid as it alone has the power to give to prevent, in a time of fear and apprehension, any sacrifice of the people's interests and the public funds or the impairment of our public credit in an effort by executive action to relieve the dangers of the present contingency. —Grover Cleveland.

Executive Mansion, Dec. 20, 1895.

Slump in Wall Street.

New York, Dec. 22.—The stock market was wildly excited. The break away came to most people in the street as a total surprise, nothing being in sight over night to portend any extraordinary developments. Before the opening, however, matters began to assume a questionable shape in the judgment of Wall street veterans. The first quotations received for American securities from London created a sensation and prepared the bankers and brokers for a stormy day. The prices recorded showed declines extending to 5 per cent and the London market reported decidedly "ragged." Each successive cable indicated still lower figures, and it was finally reported that many "jobbers" on the London stock exchange had refused to accept orders. The unfavorable news was coincided with preparations by the gold shipping houses for Saturday's exports to Europe. The initial trading was highly sensational and declines were made all along the line, extending to 4 1-2 per sent. Like the London selling, the bulk of the sales represented liquidation. Before midday, breaks, extending to 10 1-2 in Lead, preferred, had been made. In the time specified, three failures were reported on the New York stock exchange and one on the consolidated exchange. Only one, that of S. S. Sands & Co., was of financial importance. Two or three failures also occurred in Boston.

Another Bond Issue.

Washington, Dec. 22. — The news that there had been a big slump in stocks on both the New York and London exchanges and that the gold withdrawals for export to-day would approximate $4,000,000, and possibly more, created something of a sensation among treasury officials. At about noon Assistant Secretary Curtis had a conversation with New York parties over the long distance telephone, and at its conclusion hurriedly left the department for the White House, where the cabinet was in session. He was shown into the president's room, where he was joined immediately by Secretary Carlisle. The substance of Mr. Curtis' information was laid before the president and the cabinet. What measures, if any, will be taken at once by the government to allay the panicky situation is problematical, but there now seems to be no reasonable doubt that in case of continued large withdrawals of gold, even for another week, the president will send a message to congress urging the gravity of the situation as a reason of immediate and favorable action on the recommendation already made that the secretary of the treasury issue more bonds to preserve the integrity of the gold reserve. In the absence of prompt legislation in this direction, it is not doubted that another bond issue under the same authority as the preceding ones will be announced. The present situation is not regarded materially different from those which have preceded other issues, nor are the conditions regarded as any more favorable for a speedy termination of the outflow of gold. Already the reserve has reached a point in its downward course considerably below $70,000,000.

TO FIGHT ENGLAND

IRISHMEN IN THE NORTHWEST ARE LOOKING FOR TROUBLE.

Fenians, Speaking Through the St. Paul Center, Make President Cleveland an Offer to Furnish Twenty Thousand Volunteers to Fight for the United States in the Event of a War With England.

St. Paul, Dec. 23.—To the Honorable Grover Cleveland, President of the United States.—Sir: I am authorized to present to you in case of war with Great Britain, the services of 20,000 men who have been under fire before. The Committee of Safety authorizes me in making this offer.

—"Capt. J. W. Kennedy,
"Late 14th New York Volunteers."

That message was sent to President Cleveland last night, and it probably would not attract much attention from people who did not understand what the Committee of Safety was, or is. Capt. Kennedy speaks for the Northwestern center of the Fenian brotherhood, and the local centers in the Northwestern states, with the head center of the district in St. Paul, include 20,000 men. In the past few days, since the beginning of the war talk, meetings have been held in almost every village in the Northwest, and the result was a meeting of the St. Paul center last evening and the sending of the message. The meeting took place somewhere on Seventh street—just where was not stated, and the names of those present were kept secret. Capt. Kennedy was authorized to speak for the center, but not of them. And there is this to be said of the offer of men: In case there should be a war the offer would very likely be made good by 20,000 of the hereditary enemies of England.

It has been generally supposed that Fenianism was dead in everything but the name. On the contrary, it is as active in spirit as ever, but there has been no opportunity to make war on the "Sassenachs," so there has been no talk.

St. Paul has been the Fenian center since the early 70s. On Aug. 26, 1871, there met at a hotel, called the Union house, which stood on Fourth street, and which was kept by P. O'Reagan, now a resident of the city, a number of men whose names were famous in those days among Irishmen, who were in touch with the "cause." It was only a few years after the "invasion of Canada," and the leaders in that enterprise were still active Fenians and looking for an opportunity to do what harm they could for their ancient foe. There was a lot of them scattered throughout the Northwest. Down at Hastings was "Jack" Duffy, whose brother died a political prisoner in Kilmainham jail. Duffy is now a revenue officer at Walhalla, N. D. There were plenty of others, and the meetings in this city were all held at the Union house. St. Paul had a half-dozen citizens who had been active in the cause, and many of them had prices put on their heads by the British government.

St. Paul, Dec. 23.—The committee on organization of the Minnesota Prison association held a meeting in the office of Secretary Hart of the state board of charities and corrections at the capitol, and adopted the report of the recorder, Miss Grace Johnston, announcing the names of the officers of the association and the board of directors. The list is yet incomplete, a half-dozen or more of the board of directors, three of the vice presidents and two of the representative members, either having declined to serve or not having notified Miss Johnston of their intention to serve. The list, as approved, follows:

Whittier, state agent of state prison and state reformatory.

Hard Lines for a Company Held Responsible for a Disaster.

Butte, Mont., Dec. 23. — The first damage suit against the Kenyon-Connell Commercial company, growing out of the great dynamite explosion, resulted in establishing the responsibility of the company, and a verdict of $5,000 damages was returned for Mrs. Sophia Goddard, whose husband was one of the sixty men killed. The verdict was given to-day, and in anticipation of it Clark Bros., bankers, and other creditors of the Kenyon-Connell company, attached the company for claims aggregating $70,000, and the sheriff is in possession. Other damage suits to the amount of $400,000 are yet to be tried against the company.

A. D. Thurston in Want.

St. Louis, Dec. 23.—A special from Clinton, Mo., says that A. D. We are now painfully realizing that there is one thing the "dollar will not buy more of than ever before," and that is taxes! The dollar bought with ten bushels of potatoes or oats will pay no more taxes, levied either by public authorities or railroads, than when it took two to four bushels to buy it. —F S and H.

Has it ever occured to you how absurd is the idea of the National bankers that the goverment must issue bonds so as to furnish a safe basis for national bank circulation? If bonds are necessary, would they not be just as good and safe and sound and cheap, if Uncle Sam kept them himself and issued Treasury certificates on them, and so saved the interest, as if he sold them to Rothschild's and the bankers and allowed the banks to issue the notes and pocket the double interest! Why is it that every government function out of which money can be made is farmed out some corporation or other?— North Dakota Independent.

The president has make a ten strike At last he has sent to Congress a message which outlines a self respecting foreign policy and one which has struck a responsive chord in the hearts of this nation. There ought to be no particular difficulty in settling a little boundry dispute with a republic like Venzuela and there would not be only for Johnnie Bull's disposition to hog it. The President has called a halt which will have a salutary effect in bringing to the recollection of our mother country that little tea party in Boston Harbor. The chances are that now both England and America will get together and settle this little difference as civilized nations ought to settle disputes—by arbitration The nation which refuses this peaceful means of coming to an agreement will be very unpopular one of these days.—West St. Paul Times.

In speaking of this troup the Springfield Ill Press says: "Mead & Allen's New York Ideals proved to our people that they are likely to be deceived in two ways First by a company that has all program and little performance, and second by a troup like this, whose bills do not say enough. That is they give more and better than than the people had learned to expect" Tickets on sale at the drug store Admission 35 and 50 cents, children 25 cents

The prices of grain of all kinds are still trending downward, and the markets are as helpless in the hands of manipulators as was ever fly in the folds of a web. Natural price-making factors such as increased foreign demand, stronger prices abroad, or smaller receipts at primary markets cut no figure whatever when it serves the purpose of speculator to depress prices. The grain manipulator is mostly wheat but every decline in that has a sympathetic effect upon every other one so speculation rules them all, At this writing wheat in Chicago has at last touched the level of the unprecedented price of a year ago and the cheerful assurance comes from there that low water mark has not yet been reached which is no doubt true, for it will be made to frighten farmer holders into letting go, for it will not be safe for speculation to begin to advance while large quantities of wheat is held by farmers. When wheat is out of farmers hands and in sight is when the power of the manipulators is supreme.—F. S, & H

Washington Special, Dec. 5f—Minnesota gets for her school fund sections 16 and 36 in the agricultural portion of Red Lake reservation. The general land office is preparing the lists of these lands with a view of issuing the proclamation for their opening and the question of the rights of the state was presented to Commissioner Lamoreux today as to whether sections 16 and 36 should be included in the proclamation The commissioner decided that the sections belonged to the state as school land. This is the point which caused Senator Davis to hold Maj. Baldwin's bill for the disposal of the timber lands last winter and which Congressman Towne has guarded in the bill which he has introduced for the same purpose, by a provise accepting these sections for the operation of the act until the rights of the state should be determined. Commissioner Lamoreux's decision does not apply to the timber land, directly as he was only called upon to pass upon the question insofar as it affects the agricultural lands, but the same rules of law will apply to the timber lands when the time comes to dispose of them. The reason why there is any question at all grows out of the fact that Red Lake reservation is original Indian land. It has never been in the possession of the government until the recent cession and was not Public land at the time the grant for school purposes was made by congress to the states.

HOW THIEVES ARE TRAINED.

Babies In Naples Taught to Beg and Steal. Organized Gangs.

An interesting account of the way in which young children are prepared to enter the Camorra is given by Dr. de Blasio, a Neapolitan physician who has been studying the habits of criminals. The Camorra at Naples, like the Mafia in Sicily, is an organization of criminals and associates of criminals that is centuries old. The Camorra begins its work with the infants who are abandoned by their parents, or who are lent out to the impostors who beg in the streets of Naples. These children, for the most part those of persons in prison, are taught to beg for the end of a cigar or a soldo and infest the cafes. In winter they sleep in holes and stables, in summer on the church steps, under archways or on the benches in the public gardens.

When they are 6 or 7 years old, they are instructed in begging and thieving by older children. At 10 years of age the little Camorrista or little thief, becomes a cantatore (singer). He must know how to improvise a song to the girls and reply with an extemporaneous verse to the verse of a companion or of an antagonist. In Naples there are two armies of cantatori—one belonging to the streets in the older part of the city and one to those of the west end. They constitute the neophites of the Camorra and compete in public, passing their examinations by night in the streets. They choose for the subject of their chants anything that takes place in the city, and very often the object of derisive songs is an old man or a poor idiot.

The better class hear these scoffs, but do not interfere and often laugh at the wit which is scarcely ever missing. The two bands are naturally great rivals, and once a year at least they defy each other to a series of battles in which stones are the weapons, and at the close of the fray knives too often come into play. This practice of battles with stones among the boys can be traced back as far as 1625, for at that period the Duke of Alva caused 30 "stone throwers" to be arrested in Naples. The warcry of the boys is "Aniella, aniella!" the derivation of which is not certain. After the warcry comes the challenge in the form of a verse, to which the enemy responds likewise.

Then the young boys commence the attack. The passersby flee, but at no great distance stand old and young men, who incite the rival bands and if necessary rescue one or the other of them from an arrest by the police. Two years ago there was a famous battle of this kind in Piazza Mercato, which ended in a fight between the police and the stone throwers, during which the trams were stopped for some time. This duel ceases at the first drawing of blood. A slight scratch received by one of the members of the two parties puts an end to the battle. The wounded boy is surrounded by his friends and taken to his mother, real or adopted, to be bound up and nursed. The songs sung by the boys have always a chorus, and generally there are two soloists, who sing a verse in turn, which is ended by a refrain sung by the chorus, a mere "Ah, oh! Ah, oh!" In poetical form these youths express the knowledge they have of the worst evils and vices of human life, but the verses are realistic and without the least gleam of sentiment.—London News.

Steve Brodie's Ideals.

Answering a question asked by a Chicago paper, Steve Brodie replied: "If I had $250,000,000, the first thing I would do would be to build a home for the newsboys in every large city in the United States; also a home for working girls, a Keeley cure for drunkards, a workingman's library in every city; have the Chicago river water washed; have the end of South Clark street fenced in, so they could all be by themselves; pay some of your Chicago aldermen money enough to retire, so that they could never be candidates again; give what money is lacking to keep the streets clean; pay an honest man to see that the appropriations are put where they belong, and last, but not least, buy the street I so dearly love, for my own use, the Bowery."

A Piece of News.

A little girl came home from Sunday school not long ago with an air of great importance as she bustled into the room where her parents were sitting. "Mamma," she cried, "did you know the widow of Nain's son was dead?" As her mother stared at her in utter bewilderment she went on importantly: "He is. I heard it in Sunday school this morning."

Jewels That Live.

Beauty, money and fame cannot be carried beyond the horizon line that shuts around this cradle of a world, but love, joy, peace, gentleness, faith, meekness, temperance are jewels which by their very nature will survive the transit of the world invisible.—F. E. Willard.

AN INDIAN POMPEII.

Once the Versailles of India, but Now a Desolation.

Nothing sadder or more beautiful exists in India than the deserted city of Fathpur Sikri. There it stands, some 23 miles from Agra, much as it stood 300 years ago when Akbar decreed the stately pleasure house. It was built to commemorate the blessing of the holy Salim Chishti, the hermit, who dwelt among the wild beasts in his cave at Sikri, and who had foretold that Akbar's son, born on that spot, should live to succeed him on the splendid throne. The saint did not foresee that the infant would grow up into that unmitigated debauchee Jehangir, whose orgies amazed Sir Thomas Roe, and whose potent liquor caused that virtuous embassador to sneeze incontinently, to the delight of the whole court. But the heroic toper did not defile his father's palace city, which must have been deserted soon after its founder's death, for when William Finch visited in 1610 he found it "ruinate, lying like a waste district and very dangerous to pass through at night." Ruinate it has remained ever since, desolate and abandoned. No later ruler of India has ever dared to live in Akbar's Versailles, just as no ruler of India has ever climbed to the heights of Akbar's genius. In the empty palaces, the wonderful mosque, the sacred tomb, the baths, the lake—at every turn we recognize some memory of the greatest of Indian emperors. We may even enter his bedroom—the khwabgah, or "abode of dreams"—and see the very screens of beautiful stone tracery, the very Persian couplets, the identical decoration in gold and ultramarine upon which Akbar feasted his eyes during the long sultry afternoons of the Indian plains. We may walk into the houses of Faizi and Abu-l-Fazl, the laureate and the premier of his empire, who sang his glory and chronicled his reign. We may see that strange building, the Diwan-i-Khas, with its central pillar throne and odd galleries, which some have sought to identify with the famous hall where metaphysical debates took place every Friday night under the emperor's personal presidency, and philosopher and theologian, orthodox and skeptic, did furious battle for their creeds or doubts till they ended, long after the "small hours" by bandying "pervert" and "atheist," to the disgust of an unwilling witness—the austere Badaoni.

The associations of Fathpur Sikri, "City of Victory," are not its only claims to our interest and respect. Its beauty in desolation excited the poetic imagination of Heber and stirred the critical enthusiasm of Fergusson, who says of the "Turkish sultan's house," which still overlooks the Pachisi court where Akbar is fabled to have played his games of living chess, that it is "impossible to conceive anything so picturesque in outline" or any building so richly and wonderfully carved without the least exaggeration or bad taste. Equally exquisite is the celebrated shrine of St. Salim Chishti, built in 1580, with its pure white marble cenotaph, its red sandstone dome and its veranda inclosed by delicately pierced fall screens of fair marble, like fine lace set in samite. And for grandeur what can compare to the stately "high gate," Buland Darwaza, of the mosque which crowns the rocky plateau, and which the historian of architecture cites as "noble beyond any portal in India, perhaps in the whole world?"—St. James Gazette.

Consecutively Numbered Cars.

Strange things will occasionally happen on railroads. Not long ago a Fort Wayne freight conductor, on looking over the cars of his train, was surprised to find seven cars the numbers of which were in correct rotation. He could scarcely believe that through pure chance such a thing could happen, but there were the cars, with the first one next to the engine numbered 7,453, and the others back to the seventh one with numbers in the ascending order and in correct position. In their wandering about from place to place the cars got shuffled together by accident so that their numbers were as described above. According to the laws that govern the operations of chance such a thing is not likely to occur again in 1,000 years.—Pittsburg Post.

Pineapple Shirts.

Genuine cashmere shawls are so fine that one measuring three or four square yards could be stored within the shell of a small walnut. But an even more delicate fabric is manufactured on the Philippine islands from the fibers of pineapple leaves. To properly prepare the fibers for weaving involves much tedious work. For instance, the tiny fibers are tied together by hand, to make lengths. The weaving of a quantity sufficient for one shirt is the work of several years, and so it is no wonder that such a shirt costs $1,200, but the rich planters of Manila and Luzon—slaveholders yet—can afford to indulge in such extravagances.

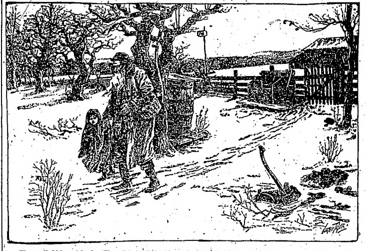
THE LAST CHORES OF THE OLD YEAR.



Time called them friends. They did the little things about the farm. He smiled upon her, guided her steps, told her many things from the winnowed wisdom of age. She led him, and sang him philosophy from the boundless wisdom of youth. In spring they found the first violets, down at the edge of the wood, where the rail fence stretched its zigzag shelter. In summer they laughed with the billowy laugh of the wheat, or listened to the rustling gossip of the tasseled corn. The birds knew them, and they knew the birds. There was the jay—scolding at fretful March; the robin, twittering inquiries of uncertain April; the doves that brought their love song when June was warm; and the pigeons that rolled in a cloud across the stubblefield. They listened to the creaking harness of the martins, that pushed fledglings from their lofty home, and taught them to fly. In autumn they found a yellow apple melting in the sun, and called it gold, and fancied the tree a mine which had escaped from the earth. In winter they scattered grains of wheat at the barn door, and watched the happy fowls devour it. They listened to the noises in the mighty barn, hunted eggs, and fed the horses fragrant whisps of clover from the mow. They sat the evening through beside the roaring fire, and each built better worlds than this. He had forgotten life's follies and its pains; she could just remember heaven's happiness. They went to sleep peacefully; but when she saw the dawn his eyes were gazing on a glory he had never told to her. The barn was so still that day and the fowls would not come out to be fed. Sparrows had driven the martins from their box; the wind blew sharp and chill across the fields; it was so very far to walk from the barn to the house—and the house was so empty to-day. Why, it seemed they had been together forever, and she could not adjust herself to this lonelier life. She was sorry for him—who had no one to lead him now. She hid her face in his long, white beard; but the forehead touched the cheek of death, and her tears were checked in startled eyes, for he did not welcome her. It was at the parting of the year. She faced the eastern future and did not know what it would hold. He waited there at the edge of the past till some chill wind from the west should bring her to him again. Time called them friendse.

THE NEW YEAR.

A Tree with fruit unharvested;
A path untrod; a House whose rooms
Lack yet the heart's divine perfumes;
A Landscape whose wide border lies

A Casket with its gifts concealed—
This is the Year that for you waits
Beyond To-morrow's mystic gates.

NEW YEAR'S EVE.

By Lulu M. Counselman.

The flickering light of the fire kissed lovingly the pale, young face and lingered upon her silken gown as if loth to leave so fair a companion. The low couch upon which Ethel Clayton reclined and the frail figure it held denoted the invalid, as did the tender looks of her father, who now and then glanced up from his book anxiously.

In health his only child had been dear to him, but now she was far nearer and dearer to his heart. He had once entertained the wish that she might make a grand match, for she possessed both wealth and beauty, but it was long ago cast aside and he never approached the subject of marriage since the dreadful New Year's eve two years ago.

Thoughts of the past chased each other through the young girl's mind, and the look of expectation on her face showed she was watching and waiting for some one this New Year's eve. The snowflakes fell gently and the bells had begun to peal the old year out and the new year in; still the girl dreamed on.

Two years ago this night she had been a happy, laughing sweetheart, secure in the love of honest John Westbrook, a clerk in her father's employ. The handsome fellow had asked her to be his wife and with his dark eyes looking into hers she had answered "Yes." They waited until New Year's eve before they told her father and the young man pleaded hard, but in vain. George Clayton was a proud man and he was very angry with them.

"I know I am poor, Mr. Clayton, but I will work hard for Ethel. You have always trusted and seemed to like me. Is it because I am poor that you refuse to give your child to me? I will work so hard for her."

"Work?" cried the father. "You come into my house like a thief and steal my greatest treasure, my child's love and then tell me you will work. Well, be it so; work, but you must find some other object to work for. She shall wed no poor scamp like you, dependent upon me for your daily bread. No, my girl will marry one who can offer her more than you ever will possess.' Now go before I say more."

"Father, you are cruel to John. I know you are disappointed, but do not refuse us. This is New Year's eve, when every one is happy, and you can make us so happy if you only will. When my dead mother married you so long ago she did not do it because you were rich, for you, I know, were very poor then. She married because she loved you and died loving you. Just so I love John, and if you refuse I shall die loving him. Do not part us, father."

"John Westbrook's love is no such love as I bore your mother, child," but there were tears in the old man's eyes as he turned away.

"Prove me, sir; I will be willing to stand any test." At the sound of the young fellow's voice George Clayton's face hardened again, and the old disappointment came into his heart.

"Well, I will give you a chance, John Westbrook. This is New Year's eve. Two years from to-night if you can come to me and say, 'George Clayton, I can give to your daughter as good a home as I take her from,' you may have my child. Until then I say no—"

A low sob was his only reply, but John Westbrook overcame his emotion and answered like a man.

"Two years from to-night I will be here again. I am young and I know if you had said ten instead of two years Ethel would be true to me, and that is something to work day and night for. I have a command that you must say yes to. I want to find her when I return as I see her now; fair, winsome and bright, in perfect health and beauty. If I do not you will be responsible for the change. On New Year's eve at this hour I shall be here. Good-by, sweetheart, good-by." He bowed his head and left the room. Out into the falling snow he went and the bells were pealing the old year out and the new one in.

Inside the Clayton mansion all was hushed and quiet. The only daughter was at death's door and the new year came in with sorrow and dread. There she lay for many weeks with her blue eyes closed and her fair head tossing in delirium. Remorse came to the father's heart and he tried to find John Westbrook, but in vain. His letters were returned unopened. By her bedside he watched day and night, until she was pronounced out of danger. The doctors told him his child would never be very strong again. The flower had been crushed and it would always be weak and delicate.

So the year passed on. She was always sweet and lovable to him, doing many little tasks for his comfort, but she seldom smiled and the sad expression did not die out of her eyes, and her father knew that she was not happy. Many times he tried to tell her how he was trying to find John Westbrook, but she would always lay her finger upon his lips and say, "Not now, dear father, wait awhile until I am stronger," and he waited. He took her to Italy, but she seemed to languish there, and when they returned she was much better in her own home. At Christmas time she was strong enough to visit some of the poor in the neighborhood and was happier than she had been for a long time.

"You are better, my child," said her father, as he bent down and kissed her forehead.

"Yes. Don't you know why? He is coming. John is coming soon, and I am counting the days until New Year's eve."

"Ethel, men are very changeable beings; do not hope too much. John Westbrook sent back my letters unopened. He may not come, so do not hope too much."

"Hope?" she cried. "Do not hope? Father, I have lived on nothing else for these two years. It has been my guiding star, my thread of life. I would have perished long ago if it had not been for hope. He will come to me, I know," and the father could say nothing more but wait.

It was again New Year's eve. The snow outside fell softly and the bells began to peal the old year out and the new one in. A faint flush had come into the girl's cheeks and the old-time light flashed into her eyes. She wore the same silken dress he had loved so well, and her father waited and watched with her. Suddenly footsteps were heard along the hall. The door was opened and John Westbrook stood before father and child. He was thinner and careworn, but still the same John Westbrook. With a glad cry she was in his arms and he gazed long and lovingly into her face. A quiver of pain swept over him and he turned to George Clayton.

"What have you done to her? I have kept my promise, but where is yours? Our home stands waiting for us, but my love is so frail a gust of wind would blow her over."

George Clayton bowed his head and did not answer, but from the shelter of her lover's arms the daughter answered for her father.

"John, do not be harsh. You do not know how good father has been. He nursed me through the dreadful fever and saved me and he tried so hard to find you. 'Let the dead past bury its dead.' Tell him, John, you forgive and forget." Her pleading voice he could not withstand

"As Ethel says, Mr. Clayton, the past is past. We cannot bring back the New Year's eve two years ago, but as they are ringing this new year in let us join together and make it a pleasant one. All I ask—and I think I deserve it—is that Ethel may soon become my wife and I pray God that when the New Year comes again we may see her as we saw her two years ago—in perfect health and happy."

"I have been an old tyrannical father and I am ashamed of it. Take my child, John Westbrook, for I know you can make her far happier than I ever did."

"Don't say that, father. We will be married, John and I, and then we will all go to the land of flowers and sunshine, where health and happiness will reign supreme."

The snow was falling gently outside and the church bells were pealing the old year out and the new one in.

ONE LAWYER'S WAY.

He Plays Eavesdropper With a Legal Brother and Then Tries to Work the Other End of the Case.

"I had an experience to-day that has taught me a lesson," said a small tradesman. "Recently I had a business transaction with a man, and it seemed to me that I had been swindled. I made up my mind to go to law about it. A friend recommended me to a young lawyer, and I went down town to see him. I found I was in one of those little nests of offices which young lawyers occupy in pairs for the sake of economy. The front part was used in common, while the rear was partitioned off into two private offices. When my turn came the door of the private office was left open, as there was no one but the other lawyer in the outer room.

"The lawyer listened to me carefully, asked a number of questions, and when I got through he jumped up, slapped me on the back, grasped my hand, and said I had a perfect case. There was not the slightest doubt as to my recovering damages in full. I told him I would think the matter over before taking any action.

"As I was passing through the main office on my way out, the other lawyer took me aside and said he wished I would give him the name and address of the man I was thinking of bringing the action against. 'You see,' he explained, 'I happened to overhear all you said to my friend about the matter in dispute, and I am so convinced that your opponent has the best of the argument from a legal standpoint that I should like to have him for a client.' As soon as I reached home I wrote to my lawyer that I had decided not to bring any suit."—New York World.

DINES ON SAVORY SMELLS.

Economical Means of Sustenance Discovered by a Flat Dweller.

"If a man only knows the ropes he can live on no income, or almost any kind of an income, in this town," observed Tony Pippin to a friend.

"Take my case, for instance. I've got a room on the sky floor of the Misery flats, out in Harlem. They charge me $2 per week, and I get a cup of coffee thrown in every morning. At noon I go to lunch with a friend, and for dinner I climb the stairs to my room."

"Do you find that satisfying?" he was asked.

"Very. You see, there are five landings, with a flat on either side. At the first I absorb a rich, creamy fog of soup or corned beef and cabbage slightly scorched. The second course may consist of codfish balls and fried liver, so thick you can't see through it.

"Hamburg steak with onions is a sure thing on the third floor, with, perhaps, the ghost of a departed pot roast lurking in the hall. Stewed tripe, hot soap suds and smoked herring are the regular combination on the upper strata. By the time I reach the top I'm full to the hat with a phantom table d'hote that lasts me till morning. I tell you, these flats are a great help to the poor man."—New York Journal.

Antitoxin Treatment for Diphtheria.

In the face of the distrust and opposition with which the attempt to extend the use of antitoxin in the treatment of diphtheria has been met in certain influential quarters it is gratifying to read the summary of results, so far as obtained by the new treatment, from the pen of Dr. Welch, professor of pathology in the Johns Hopkins university. Statistics have been carefully collected from all parts of the world, and the reduction in mortality in diphtheria by serum treatment is brought out in a very striking manner. Perhaps the best testimony to the efficacy of the new system is furnished by the experience of Baginsky and others, who record the results obtained during an involuntary pause in the serum treatment caused by failure in the supply of serum. Thus Baginsky states that between March, 1894, and March, 1895, 525 children were treated with antitoxin, with a fatality of 15.6 per cent. During the period when the supply of serum was exhausted, 126 children were treated without antitoxin, with a fatality of 48.4 per cent. Similarly, Korte noted a rise in fatality from 33.3 per cent, when no serum was procurable, and during an epidemic of diphtheria at Trieste the fatality rose from 8.7 per cent to 50 per cent when the supply of serum failed. A German medical journal has instituted a collective investigation of all the cases of diphtheria treated with serum. Such statistics owuld prove of inestimable value in assisting the formation of a correct official judgment of the therapeutic value of antitoxin. In the meantime, Dr. Welch states that the study, so far, of the results of the treatment of over 7,000 cases of diphtheria by antitoxin demonstrates beyond all reasonable doubt, that anti-diptheretic serum is a specific curative agent for diphtheria, surpassing the efficacy of all other known methods of treatment for the disease, while the essential harmlessness of the serum has been demonstrated by over 100,000 injections.

Good Manners Home-Made.

Children must be taught what the parents wish them to know. Teach them truthfulness and gentle ways and they will be true and gentle. If a boy hears bad language from his father he will repeat it just as certainly as he has a tongue in his mouth; and if a little girl hears her mother gossip, she will gossip the moment she meets a playmate. People who devour their food like cattle must not expect their children to have nice table manners. Gentlemen and good women are home-made. There is nothing on earth for which one ought to be more thankful than for having been brought up in the atmosphere of a pure home. Such a home may be deficient in material comforts. A man as sturdy as an oak once said: "I was the son of poor parents, and from my youth up was inured to self-denial and hardships, but I do not remember ever to have heard a word from the lips of either my father or my mother that was not as it should be." Better such recollections than a great inheritance.

Preparing the Cream for Churning.

Most good butter makers prefer the cream to become slightly acid before churning, but the acid should not be carried too far, for if it is the yield of butter will not be as great, as the acid will consume, to a certain extent, the oil or butter portion of the cream. The cream should be churned at a temperature of 58 to 60 degrees in the summer and at 60 to 62 degrees in the winter. When milk is set in shallow pans and allowed to stand thirty-six to forty-eight hours at a temperature not varying but little from 60 degrees the cream will perhaps be very near the proper condition and temperature for churning, when removed or skimmed. But when cream is raised by the cold, deep-setting or Swedish method, its temperature is, of course, not the proper one for churning, and unless sweet cream butter is preferred it must be allowed to stand until the proper degree of acidity has been developed.—Denver Field and Farm.

A Charming Authoress.

She wasn't down on the programme, but for all that the most interesting thing about the Sorosis meeting was the presence of the author of "Some Emotions and a Moral." She sat upon the platform and she didn't look a bit like a woman who would chose "John Oliver Hobbs" as a pen-name. She was of medium height, plump in figure and possessed a pair of bright, rather restless brown eyes. Her hair was also brown and her complexion brilliant. When complimented upon her clever stories she replied: "Oh, you are very kind; but I don't feel one bit clever over here. Everything's so clever. Why, I haven't met a stupid woman since I landed in America." Mrs. Craigie expressed herself as especially delighted with Sorosis.—New York Evening Sun.

A Whole Family Rescued.

North Huron, N. Y.—(Special.) O. H. Sum of this city had nearly become a physical wreck through excessive use of tobacco, and his brother-in-law, son-in-law and father-in-law were also in ill health from the same cause. The four men all began taking No-To-Bac at the same time, and though representing great differences of age and infirmity, they have not only been entirely cured of the tobacco habit, but are now in the best possible physical condition. The quartette are proud of the result and recommend No-To-Bac with the greatest enthusiasm. Hundreds of tobacco users are following the example of the Sum family.

Hot Bran for Fur.

Fur, after some years' wear, will look much improved if cleaned with new bran, previously heated in an oven. Rub the hot bran well into the fur with a piece of flannel, shake the fur to remove all particles and then brush thoroughly. The fur will clean more easily if the lining and wadding are first removed, but such removal is not absolutely needful. The flat, oily look which mars the appearance of the neck portion of furs long in use, is mostly, if not wholly, removed by means of hot bran. Rub the fur the wrong way, this meaning, in this particular instance, the right way.

Intelligent Breeding.

The animals intended expressly for breeding purposes should be fed in a manner different from those that are being fattened for market. A very fat animal is not suitable for breeding, and many valuable mares, cows, sows and ewes that are very high in flesh either die in giving birth to their young or fail to produce vigorous offspring. The many cases of milk fever which occur among cows and ewes may often be traced to the use of too much concentrated food and lack of judgment in feeding.

Scarlet Fever Settled in the Back

AN OPERATION WAS UNSUCCESSFULLY PERFORMED.

The Patient Was Finally Restored, After Eighteen Years.

From the Evening News, Newark, N. J.

About eighteen years ago, when Mrs. Annie Dale, of 88 Bruce Street, was a bright, merry school girl, she was taken ill with scarlet fever. She recovered, but she was a very different girl from a physical standpoint. She was cured of the scarlet fever but it left her with an affection of the back. As she grew older the pain seemed to increase. Her sufferings were intensified by her household duties, but she never complained, and with one hand pressed tightly to her back she did her work about her cozy home.

"I was fourteen years old when I was attacked with scarlet fever, and have now suffered with my back for eighteen years.

"Night and day I suffered. It really seemed as if I must succumb to the pain, and then to make matters worse, my head ached so badly that I could scarcely see, at times. Finally I went to St. Michael's Hospital, at the corner of High Street and Central Avenue, and there the surgeons performed a difficult operation on my back but it did no good; it was like everything else. I was told at the hospital to return for another operation, but the first had left me so weak I could not go back. Then again I had become discouraged and my three children needed my attention and care at home. The pain became harder to stand and my back was almost broken, it seemed. I thought I would never know what it would be like to be well again when I was told to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. With many doubts, a faint heart and an aching back I went to get the pills, and little dreaming that they would prove the elixir of a new life to me, I began to take them. Only a short time elapsed before I began to improve. Could it be possible that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were doing what everything else had failed to accomplish! I asked myself the question many times and before long I was enabled by my improved condition to answer the query with an emphatic 'Yes.' Now the pain of almost twenty years is cured by these Pink Pills in a few months. I have no pain of any kind now, but I have got some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and while I do not think it will ever be necessary to use them again, I shall certainly never be without them in the house."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Perfect Health and a Long Life.

Lessons given to Civilization by the Indian.

THE CARE OF THE HUMAN SYSTEM AS PRACTISED BY THEM ACKNOWLEDGED BY DOCTORS EVERYWHERE AS INIMITABLE.

NO MATTER what may be said against the Indian on account of his cruelty, selfishness and unwillingness to become civilized, he has given civilization a knowledge of the curative qualities of roots, barks, herbs and gums of the forest, that long after he has become exterminated will serve to keep his memory green.

The Indian is a typically perfect man living a life of uninterrupted health. The aches, pains and troubles so common to his civilized brothers are unknown to him. The reason for this is that for centuries he has studied the secrets of nature and learned from her exactly which of her many remedies to use for certain troubles. One of the greatest sources of illness in this country arises from a deranged condition of the liver. The sufferer may be designated by a sallow complexion, that in many instances is more or less blotched. He experiences lassitude, loss of appetite, an empty feeling of the stomach, even after a full meal; sleepless nights, nervousness, bad breath, lack of energy and all these troubles continue to grow worse from day to day, until his system becomes so impoverished that he is overcome by some fever, or what under ordinary circumstances would be a mild cold and death rapidly follows.

To overcome this the famous Kickapoo Indian Sagwa should be taken, this acts directly on the stomach, kidneys and liver, invigorating them and aiding them to perform their work in a natural manner, at the same time purifying the blood and generally toning up the entire system. Thousands of sufferers can testify to-day to the wonderful efficacy of this great remedy for all diseases resulting from afflictions of the above named organs. If you are suffering take it at once before your disease reaches an advanced stage. A single trial is sufficient to convince you that it is the thing to restore you to health. No bad results have ever been experienced from its use, it being purely vegetable and containing no poisonous ingredients of any description. Kickapoo Indian Sagwa may be obtained of all druggists at $1 a bottle; six bottles for $5 dollars.

It is reported that there is an effort being made to reorganize the Hudson River Tunnel company and complete the work. There is only 300 feet to be completed to the New York shore, and $1,000,000 would complete that portion, and $1,500,000 more would complete the approaches.

A. D. Thurston, who in 1886 organized the Order of Railway Telegraphers at Vinton, Iowa, and was its grand chief for seven years, is at the police headquarters at Clinton, Iowa, with his wife and six children destitute and cared for by the city. He is helpless from rheumatism and was en route overland to Springfield, narrowly escaping drowning while camping near a small stream.

NOW ONLY ASHES

THE BODY OF HARRY HAYWARD IS CREMATED.

The Ceremony Takes Place at the Crematory in Graceland Cemetery, Chicago, in the Presence of Dr. Thadeus Hayward, Ed Goodsell, the Undertaker, Reporters and Attendants.

Chicago, Dec. 29.—A shapeless heap of ashes is now all that remains of Harry Hayward, the dashing young murderer of Catherine Ging. At Graceland cemetery, in the presence of Dr. Thadeus Hayward, brother of Harry; Harry Goodsell, a cousin; N. F. Warner, the undertaker; the crematory attendants and reporters, the body of the murderer was thrust into the furnace and rendered to ashes.

A plain pine box about six and one-half feet in length, with two iron handles on each side, rested upon a baggage truck on the sidewalk at the corner of Canal and Adams street, near the union depot, this morning, and curious people stopped to look at it. Those bolder than the rest stepped up to the box and read from the bill of lading:

Remains

HARRY T. HAYWARD.

Destination, Chicago.

Then they would glance swiftly and knowingly at each other, and realize that the mysterious box enclosed all that was mortal of the late Harry Hayward, the murderer of Catherine Ging. The news of the arrival of the body soon spread through the depot, and every man who could leave his post for a moment came to view the box.

The object of so much attention arrived in Chicago from Minneapolis this morning at 9:30 o'clock over the Milwaukee. It was lifted from the train and placed upon the truck. Then it was taken into the basement baggage room, placed upon the elevator and lifted to the main baggage room and wheeled out on the sidewalk.

Taken to the Cemetery.

There it rested for some fifteen minutes, when a tall and portly man entered the room with a policeman and gave directions for the transfer of the body to the suburban train of the Milwaukee, which runs to Graceland cemetery from this city. This man was N. F. Warner, a Minneapolis undertaker, who was in charge of the body and its cremation. He passed through the ticket gate and waited. He began to grow impatient, and the hour for the train to depart was drawing near, when all at once a relieved look was seen to overspread his face, and Dr. Thaddeus Hayward and Harry Goodsell, a cousin of the dead man, approached and all exchanged glances, and then boarded the train for Graceland.

As soon as possible Mr. Warner, who accompanied young Hayward and Goodsell, had the plain wooden box containing the body transferred to the train for Graceland cemetery, and when this was arranged the three men boarded the train and sat conversing in a low tone during the trip.

When the train stopped at the entrance to the cemetery the cart on which the coffins are placed was shoved up and the box lifted out. The station master and two attendants from the cemetery were the only ones to meet the train, and the corpse had scarcely been removed when the train pulled out.

Then the two attendants bent their backs and commenced slowly pulling the little cart with its heavy load across the tracks into the cemetery. The three men who had come from Minneapolis to take back with them the ashes of the dead man followed behind with bowed heads and slow steps. Sadly and slowly, the little procession wound its way along the gravel paths to the crematory.

When the little chapel, beneath which is the crematory, was reached the body was carried to the basement, where are the huge furnaces. There were to be no services or prayers. The attendants unscrewed the lid of the outer box and the coffin was lifted out. It was covered with black cloth, and on the silver plate was engraved:

"At Rest."

The lid of the coffin was removed and the little group pressed closer. Through the glass was seen the face of a young man, handsome even in death. The eyes were closed as naturally as though in sleep, but the mouth was partially open, giving a weird expression to the lower part of the face. The forehead and side of the head were darkened, showing where the physicians had examined the brain. Tears came to the eyes of the brother and cousin when they looked at the clay-like face, but except for the moistening of their eyes for a moment neither gave way to his emotion.

Young Goodsell asked for a lock of Harry's hair, but there was no tremor in his voice as he made the request, nor did he quiver when he took the moist scrap of hair from the undertaker. Dr. Hayward said nothing, but all the time gazed steadily at the form of his brother.

The silver trappings were taken from the coffin, the glass laid aside, and the somber black casket was lifted to the trusses; the oven doors were opened and two attendants hastily pushed the corpse into its fiery bed. The doors were shut and the little group who had been watching abstractedly stood for a few moments without uttering a word and then as if by one accord separated about the cemetery to await the consuming of the body.

The incineration occupied three hours and fourteen minutes. The corpse was placed on the sliding platform and pushed into the intensely heated receptacle at 1:03 o'clock. At 2 o'clock the furnace was opened, the plate on which the remains rested was withdrawn and the dust to which he had been reduced, was gathered up, placed in an urn and given to the dead man's brother, Dr. Hayward.

Undertaker Warner took charge of the ashes which were placed in a stone receptacle and returned to Minneapolis.

Another Bond Issue.

Washington, Dec. 29.—The treasury lost gold to-day to the amount of $2,418,000, which leaves the true amount of the reserve $63,803,320. The recent heavy withdrawals, with the indication pointing to their indefinite continuence, it is thought can lead to no other result than another issue of bonds, and that in the near future. The administration is strongly opposed to the bond bill now pending in the house.

More Bodies Recovered.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Dec. 29.—Four of the bodies of the six entombed miners in the Nelson mine near Dayton were recovered to-day. They were Cyrus Alexander, Floyd Jewell, Robert Jewell and Robert Hamilton. The men were found with their faces against the bottom of the mine, indicating that they died while trying to get fresh air.

Mabel Harris, aged twenty, and Lallie Baptist, aged sixteen, were drowned in Milwaukee while skating.

MANITOBA'S CAMPAIGN.

Is the Confederation in Danger of Disruption?

Winnipeg, Dec. 31.—Unexpected opposition is developing against Premier Greenway in the outside constituencies and it is not expected there will be many uncontested seats when polling for the legislative seats takes place on Jan. 15. The Conservatives have decided to contest every Winnipeg seat, but on the general policy nearly all the candidates support national schools. Reviewing the situation the Free Press says:

"According to all present indications this province is about to be engaged in a struggle with the dominion in resisting its proposed interference with the provincial educational system. It is in support of its stand against such interference that Mr. Greenway's government is appealing to the electors to return it to power. On this issue there is no manner of doubt as to what the electors will do. Mr. Greenway will receive a mandate to hold out against the imposition of a separate school system upon the province by any authority outside that of the province. This much being perfectly well understood, the serious consequences of the coming struggle should not be ignored. Without going so far as to say that the disruption of the confederation will follow, it is not too much to suppose that a struggle involving religious and radical differences may cause a drift in that direction. The government, or party, therefore, that deliberately forces on this struggle that does not even put forth every effort to prevent it, will bear heavy responsibility."

Sized Up His Brain.

Minneapolis, Dec. 31.—A specialist, who is said to have made an examination of Hayward's brain, says the great criminal was perfectly able to tell right from wrong, but that he was an arrant coward. He was an egotist, and his stupendous reasoning powers were augmented by a vivd imagination. "To his cunning add falsehood, to falsehood add indifference, to indifference add self-conceit, to self-conceit add over-confidence, and to all add physical cowardice an you have Hayward," is the way the specialist sizes up the dead murderer, from an examination of the brain.

McGill Again a Publisher.

Minneapolis, Dec. 31.—Ex-Gov. A. R. McGill, president of the Northern Trust company and ipso facto the receiver of the Penny Press Publishing company, was for a number of years a newspaper publisher and proprietor at St. Peter. It is not, therefore, a new undertaking into which he has launched when his company assumed the sponsorship and management of the Penny Press. Gov. McGill said: "The receivership is supposed to be a temporary arrangement. It will be ten days before the schedule of assets and liabilities is filed, and until that time nothing can be done except to keep the paper running.

Brewers' Trust Is on Again.

Chicago, Dec. 31.—The beer war which has raged for a year or so has been settled. All the brewing companies doing business in Chicago have perfected a mutual agreement by which the price of beer will be advanced to $5 a barrel, the present price being $4 or less. It is estimated that this will result in the closing of some 2,000 saloons in Chicago during the first three months of 1896.
